College Marine Science Program To Continue On A Year To Year Basis

By Dan Rattiner

Long Island University yesterday announced an arrangement with SUNY Stony Brook to have Stony Brook take over the Marine Science Program at Southampton College.

On the surface of it, it looks as if Southampton College, or at least a good deal of it, is saved. But a closer look reveals a much different, darker and more tentative arrangement. In the long run it may not be good for the College at all. At best, it's a start. Which might develop into something.

Southampton College in its current configuration is a subsidiary of Long Island University with an undergraduate class of 844 students, down from about 1100 last year. The dramatic decline is, of course, because of the announcement last year that this will be the final year for the LIU Southampton College. LIU is pulling the plug. And the entire 112-acre campus along with about thirty buildings is to be abandoned by the undergraduates by September 2005. The 1100 student undergraduate class (now 844) will have to continue its college studies either at other LIU campuses, or somewhere else.

The pride of the school, among the undergraduate programs, has been the Marine Science Program. Of the 844 students enrolled this fall, 177 are in this very highly regarded curriculum. They do not, however, go about their studies on the main campus, which is inland, but on their own campus of four buildings, called the Marine Science Center, which is southeast of the main campus on Shinnecock

Furthermore, the taking over of this program is merely a tentative, temporary thing to see how it works out. Stony Brook is accepting the facilities here on a three-year lease that is set up on a year to year basis. At the end of the three years — which is not long enough for graduating high school seniors to feel confident that they would be entering a four year program — Stony Brook could either walk away, continue on, or move the program completely out of Southampton and have it be in Stony Brook, either at the campus there or at a dock facility that they could lease closer to that campus at, say, either Port Jefferson or Setauket Harbor. Both places front on Long Island Sound, and both places are within ten minutes of the Stony Brook University Campus.

Finally, as if to drive the point home that this arrangement has nothing to do with the old 112-acre main Southampton Campus, Stony Brook plans to have all the students in the program be based in Stony Brook. These will include current Southampton College students, and any new SUNY Stony Brook students (from among the Bay adjacent to docks that line Little Neck Road. It is these facilities that have been leased to Stony Brook University. And it is the Marine Science Program, the jewel of the soon-to-be-defunct Southampton College, that will be transferred to Stony Brook to become the SUNY Stony Brook Marine Science Program.

Civil War Soldier's Performance In Southampton Play Turns Real

By Dan Rattiner

"It's a tragedy all the way around," Tom Spreer said to me on Friday. "It's a tragedy for everybody."

Mr. Spreer is the attorney who represents Brian J. Raber, a 27-year-old man whom you may know from some of the many parts he has played in regional theatre in this community during the last few years. Raber could spend the next twenty years in jail for what he did last Sunday night, in costume, just one hour before he was scheduled to go on stage for the final performance of a local theatre production in Southampton.

The play was an original work written by a Sag Harbor playwright, Stacy Dermont. Stacy had thought, given what is going on in the world today, to write a war story. Our communities are three hundred years old and more. Many of them go back before the Revolution. Perhaps she could write a play based on some love letters written by a soldier to a local girl back home, from a war long ago. She made some calls late last fall, and found that at the Southampton Historical Society, they had just received, weeks before, five letters written between 1862 and 1865 by Civil War soldier James R. Foster of this loss.

Stacy obtained copies of the letters, and working for several months, developed an hour and a half long play out of them. On one side of the stage, there would be constructed a Civil War encampment meant to be somewhere on the front lines where Officer Foster would pen his letters and read them aloud as he wrote. On the other side of the stage, there would be constructed the parlor of Benjamin Franklin Rogers' farmhouse on Mecox Road in Bridgehampton. Here, Phebe Rogers and her older sister, Melanie, would discuss the letters and talk about their lives. The name of the play would be Homefront.

Arrangements were made to give a series of performances of this play at the Southampton Historical Society on Meeting House Lane, just one building in from the corner of Main Street and Jobs Lane. Fifty or so folding chairs would be set up in a gallery. The play would be per-Southampton to his sweetheart back home, Miss Phebe Rogers of Bridgehampton.

After the last letter and just months before the war ended, Mr. Foster was captured by the Southerners and taken to the Andersonville Prison where he died. There was no record of what the reaction had been by Miss Rogers to 14,000 undergraduates there) who want to avail themselves of the Marine Science Program. They will offer housing at their campus dormitories there — about 4,000 units are currently there for the Stony Brook undergraduates — and though students might be welcome to find private housing near the Marine Science Center in Southampton during the next few years, they will have to drive the two hour round trip to Stony Brook for their required non-marine science classes. On the other hand, those living at Stony Brook will be provided a free bus to Southampton to continue their studies. It seems likely and sensible that classes for the program might be "clustered," so the students would only have to take this round trip journey two or three days a week.

And so, at best, this new development might be considered a start, but at worst it might be simply the case of the crown jewel of Southampton College being plucked, making it therefore more difficult to find a new educational program for the main 112 acre campus and its 30 or so buildings.

The fear is, of course, that these 112 acres, owned by Long Island University, might be carved up into housing lots. They could sell for many millions of dollars on the current market if they did that. And Long Island University, though it says it remains committed to having an educational facility on this campus, has also been licking its wounds, saying it rues the day it ever decided, 25 years ago, to put a campus at Southampton, that they have run it from afar disastrously since the beginning, and have lost more than $100 million over the years. They may be licking their wounds, but they may also be licking their chops. It becomes all the more important that a Southampton Town proposal to issue a nine month building moratorium on the property, to be considered further on November 23 at Town Hall, be passed.

Meanwhile, as we go to press, we learn here at the last minute that Long Island University is deep in negotiations with a very wealthy developer who has on the table a plan for these 112 acres that would take all the various considerations into account, honor them all, and make LIU and himself very rich in the process. Here is a press release that has come into our hands, ready to go, that may shortly be announced.

PRESS RELEASE SOUTHAMPTON CAMPUS PRESERVED AS VACANT LAND IN PERPETUITY, SOUTHAMPTON COLLEGE FOR MARINE GAMBLING GETS THE GO AHEAD.

Officials of Long Island University yesterday announced the long awaited decision about what is to be done with the 112 acre site currently occupied by Southampton College after that college closes its undergraduate program in September 2005.

The site will not be used for any part of the undergraduate program of Southampton College.

Instead, Southampton will be abandoned, LIU will bulldoze down all the old, decrepit and new, unfinished buildings that occupy the site, and then leave the land vacant for future generations in accordance with the wishes of the nearby Shinnecock Indian Nation which considers the college property sacred land.

Not all the property will be vacant, however. At the far northwest corner of the 112 acre site, there will be constructed a tall, 35-story tower for the brand new Southampton School of Casino Gambling. The first five floors will be for parking. And each of the floors above will be used for a separate new curriculum involving one or another aspect of the gambling industry. Programs will include hospitality, surveillance, introductory blackjack and advanced blackjack, croupier careers, catering, accounting, cashier work, bartending, marketing, valet parking, poker, pole dancing, doormen, concierges, front desk clerking, housekeeping, security and police, limousine driving and blood alcohol metering. The top two floors will be a duplex penthouse gambling casino and restaurant run by the students, open to the public, which will revolve in a circle, and shine a strong, constantly moving searchlight out into the surrounding area, thus simulating the activities of a working lighthouse.

The building is designed to be identical to a lighthouse skyscraper now proposed by Charles Wang, the billionaire founder of Computer Associates, for future construction adjacent to the Nassau Coliseum. However, here in Southampton, the twin to that building will also feature a giant, sixty-foot tall turning windmill halfway up. The Southampton building will thus honor the East End traditions of windmills and lighthouses, except that the new windmill here will also provide enough power to handle the entire electrical requirements of the school.

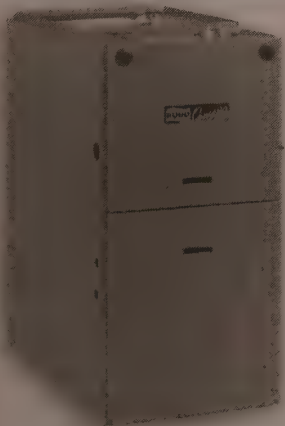

The present windmill on the site, built around 1750, will be either donated to the Southampton Historical Society who will, at their own expense, move it off the site prior to the bulldozers coming in. Or it will be auctioned off to the highest bidder. Or if that fails, chopped up for firewood.

The final element of the new plan will consist of a raised concrete and steel platform, twelve feet above the ground and covered with topsoil and turf, supported on posts and extended over all the preserved, vacant, sacred land from one end to the other. The land on this raised 111-acre platform will be subdivided into 55 two-acre building lots, which will have identical nine bedroom McMansion spec houses on them. When fully landscaped, these McMansions on their raised platforms will offer sweeping, unmatched views of the Atlantic Ocean to the south, and the top 90% of the magnificent new Lighthouse-Windmill combination casino gambling school tower to their north. The McMansions will be offered up for sale to the general public for $15 million each.

The announcement of this decision by the Trustees of Long Island University was made by the Public Relations Department of Southampton College, formerly in the administration building on the Southampton Campus, recently moved to C. W. Post, and now, after a brief stay in a basement storeroom of a building on the Brooklyn campus of LIU, located in an abandoned gas station in Secaucus, New Jersey.

A Loving Tribute To The Hamptons International Film Festival, 2004

By Dan Rattiner

The Hamptons International Film Festival was held last week here. It started last Wednesday, ended Sunday, and between those days, the promoters of the festival screened about 150 movies at five different theaters in the Hamptons.

Many people say this festival is the most enjoyable event of the year in the Hamptons. For one thing, it is held outside of the main summer season, in October, when the weather is beautiful and brisk, the foliage is in full fall color and the harvest is still coming in. Also, it is a welcome boost to the economy. It's not at a time when the community is jam-packed with people, other events and parties. So the Festival has the weekend to itself.

The main reason everybody loves the film festival, however, is that if they make the effort and see lots of films, they come away feeling, correctly or incorrectly, that they are an important part of the film industry. In addition to presenting awards, the festival brings together

A DIATRIBE AGAINST DIGITAL CLOCKS

By Dan Rattiner

I do not understand how we ever could have decided to welcome digital clocks into our homes. The clocks with the little hand and the big hand are so much better, particularly this time of the year when we have to walk around changing the times of all the clocks back to Standard Time.

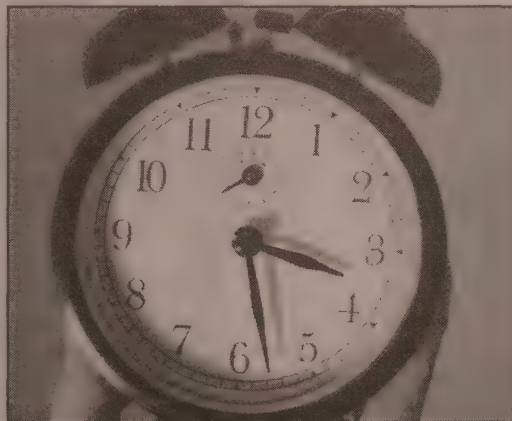

With the big hand and little hand clocks, all you do is gently place your index finger alongside the hour hand and push it back a little. There you are. Nine a.m. is eight a.m.

With the digital clocks, it is a very big deal. You have to press SET with one finger, then press HOUR with the other and watch as the number slowly snaps to the next number, gets to twelve, starts back to one, then snaps to two, three, four and so forth, but with the PM in the corner, then get it up to twelve again then one, two, three and so forth until you arrive to the number just before the one you started and exactly at the right moment you have to release your finger and it stops. If you are not right on the moment — and this can be a very stressful experience as you wait and wait and wait — you overshoot. And then you have to go around again. Twice.

By which time a minute has already passed and you have to advance the minute hand one snap.

The most disconcerting thing about all of this, other than the fact that you have an in-dentation in one of your fingers, is that if you happen to be one of those people who deal entirely with literally observable facts, it is tomorrow. Same time, but one hour earlier. What a mess. And the whole summer, you've had the ability to look at tomorrow and never did. What negligence.

It was an enormously profound development many years ago when some inventor came up with the idea of telling time with a big hand and a little hand. Before that, one told time with a sundial.

People said to the inventor, looking at that first clock — where are you going to keep it? You take it with you, he said. The people were completely baffled.

Sundials were big things that you had to mount on the ground. And they had to be calibrated. Wherever the ground was in the world, the blade of the sundial had to be exactly so. Otherwise, the time wouldn't be right. The new clocks would work ANYWHERE. And even on cloudy days.

Acting (continued from page 15)

formed over four weekends, three performances a week, Friday and Saturday evening and then again on Sunday at 2 p.m.

As winter turned to spring, Robert Dowling was brought on board as a set designer and stage manager, and Toni Munna, 51, the well-known East End director (Women on Fire, Tell Me About It, the Vagina Monologues) was brought in, and a casting call went out.

The part of Phebe Rogers was won by Bianca Massi, a 17-year-old senior at East Hampton High School whose family had moved here from Italy not long ago and who had previously performed in The Cherry Orchard. The part of her older sister was won by Marie Sellers, a waitress at Sant Ambroeus restaurant on Main Street who had worked in dinner theatre in Illinois, performing Rumors and Love Rides the Rails. And the part of James R. Foster, the soldier, was won by 27-year-old Brian Raber of Bellport, who had played in many regional performances both here and in Los Angeles, including The Man Who Came to Dinner, Mr. Roberts, Stalag 17, Biloxi Blues and Prelude to a Kiss.

Rehearsals went well. The show premiered on Friday, October 1, with the twelfth and final performance scheduled for Sunday, 2 p.m., October 24.

Reporter Christian McLean of Dan's Papers reviewed this show.

"...The universal hardships of war, any war, resonate through the carefully scripted, thoroughly enlightened performance," he wrote. "The character of Phebe Rogers is quite the undertaking. Although it can be argued that the letters themselves are the primary character of the play, it can be contested easily enough that the central focus rests on the shoulders of East Hampton High School student Bianca Massi, who carries this weight effortlessly...The letters, obviously not written for the dramatic stage, seemed to minimize the role of James. But by adhering to and solely reading the personal correspondence...it seemed that the development of Foster's character, and, in effect, Raber's rein on him, led him to play an almost morose, depressed man, who, as the play unfolds, looks more and more bleakly toward the future."

On Saturday night, at the next to final performance on October 23, director Toni Munna noticed that Brian Raber seemed almost distracted playing his role. He sometimes stumbled on his lines. He had to read them, sometimes, from the letters.

At the end of the performance, after the applause, she asked him if anything was wrong. He said there wasn't. She thought nothing further of it.

On Sunday at noon, two hours before the final performance, Brian Raber arrived for the

Now along came digital clocks and it was the newest thing. You weren't "with it" unless you threw all your old big hand little hand clocks away and went digital.

But digital is so, well, cold and unemotional. If time were a book, digital would be like — she liked him and he liked her, too. Big hand little hand time would be like — she looked up into his big, grey eyes and in them, saw deep into his soul, the troubles and the triumphs, the fear and the yearnings, and she knew that she would not be able to resist him, or her own yearnings for him, for long.

You are in your car, racing for home. When you are just a mile away, your wife calls you on your car phone and tells you she is gasping for air and thinks she is having a heart attack. You are a doctor and have dealt with many heart attacks. What happens in the first forty five seconds is crucial. You look at the time display on your dashboard. It is 11:59 a.m.

With a big hand little hand clock or watch, you can look down and watch the seconds tick off. You might have fifty seconds, forty nine. You race up the driveway, skid to a halt, leap out and run in the front door and there she is, sitting in a club chair, slowly turning blue. But you are in time.

It's your choice. You can choose cold and boring. Or you can choose reality, emotions and drama, all the stuff that adds richness and interest to our lives. And no indent on your index finger.

Doin' Time For Martha

Westhampton Beach Residents Open Iddoadayformartha.com

By Emily J Weitz

As much press as it's received, as many "Saturday Night Live" episodes as it's inspired, it's still difficult to really imagine Martha Stewart behind bars. The happy homemaker who created an empire out of ambition is now serving time in the Alderson Federal Prison, known to many as "Camp Cupcake." How fitting.

But before Martha went to jail, she inspired millions of people, particularly women. And those people are not turning their backs on her. Westhampton Beach resident Christina Arneson and her longtime friend and business partner Barbara With decided to take action to stand up for Martha. They started an organization called I'd Do A Day For Martha. The plan was to attempt to serve some of Martha's time for her. Not surprisingly, when they sent their request to the warden at Camp Cupcake, he responded by saying, "Although I am sure you have the best of intentions, your offer is not a viable or legal option." Still, the two women are determined to show Martha their support. Their strategy is to have people go to a local prison, tell the warden their feelings on

THIS WEEK AT THE PELOSI TRIAL

By David Stoll

"I bashed his @!&* brains in and he cried like a bitch and begged for his life."

So said Daniel Pelosi, the electrician accused of murdering Ted Ammon, according to his former girlfriend, Tracey Riebenfeld. Riebenfeld, who attended a wedding with Pelosi the day after the murder and subsequently dated him for several months, said that Pelosi described the murder to her. She said that when she asked Pelosi why he did it, he pounded his chest and said "I have a monster in me." According to her testimony, Pelosi used a lamp and flashlight for the murder, and also covered the windows with pillows, in case the police were watching. She also said that Pelosi told her that Generosa Ammon was in the house during the murder to keep watch, and that one of Pelosi's nephews, Jeffrey Lukert, and a friend, Christopher Parrino, were at the house. Parrino has been indicted for criminal facilitation and hindering the Ammon prosecution.

Riebenfeld testified that Pelosi initially had told her that he hated Generosa but had to watch her carefully as he was concerned he would be framed. He then asked Riebenfeld to tell the police (falsely) that she and Pelosi were having sex in his Bronco the night of the murder. The Pelosi/Riebenfeld relationship later ended when Riebenfeld saw Pelosi wearing a wedding ring when he visited her brother's house. That was how she learned of his marriage to Generosa. It was that night, during a long conversation, that she said Pelosi told her about the murder, and then threatened to harm her children if she told anyone. She admitted to feeling betrayed, but denied that she made up her testimony. She also testified that Pelosi's estranged sister, Joan Giammateo, is her best friend, but again denied that her testimony was concocted.

A forensic scientist, Donald Doller, testified that he had identified what initially appeared to be loose hair on Ammon's left shoulder, but then he realized it was still attached to Ammon. It was this hair that was originally characterized as "question hairs." Pelosi's attorney had suggested in his opening statement that certain hair was not analyzed and is now missing; he told reporters after Doller testified that more will be revealed during the defense's case. Doller also testified that Ammon's blood was found throughout the master bedroom. Pelosi's blood was not found in the master bedroom or in the car Pelosi is alleged to have used that night, but only on Ammon's garage floor. Testimony was presented that Pelosi had his car cleaned two weeks after the murder, including stains that appeared to be blood.

Doller showed jurors a 9-foot, perfect scale model of the second floor of Ammon's home. Every detail, down to a tiny model sweater on a counter, reflected the scene as police found it following the murder. A cutout of Ammon appears on the floor. The model cost $7,500 to build.

In an effort to rebut Pelosi's anticipated defense that Ammon was killed by a gay man, prosecutors called Lori Finkle, a Manhattan investment banker who was at her East Hampton home 15 minutes away from Ammon's mansion on the day and night of the killing. She testified that she and Ammon dated occasionally and, in fact, had sex in his bedroom the afternoon of the murder. She said that later that evening, Ammon left a phone message for her that he was at a beach and thought it was a gay beach. He also said on the message that men were there, and that he was scared and was going home. Finkle said she did not believe that Ammon had homosexual tendencies, but she admitted that she would be surprised if Ammon did not know the beach he was on that night was popular with gay men. She said that he had

Senator In A Long-Ago Election Surfaces In Town To Talk About A Film

By Debbie Tuma

At the height of all the buzz around the 2004 Presidential election, Hamptons International Film Festival goers got to take a trip back in time to the turbulent 70s, during the recent screening of One Bright Shining Moment: The Forgotten Summer of George McGovern. They also got a surprise when the South Dakota Senator stood up in the audience at Guild Hall, to share his own views about his famous race against Richard Nixon for President in 1972, and about the moments leading up to this big election. McGovern, 82, also shared his insights into the similarities between the controversy over the unpopular Vietnam war, and the current war in Iraq.

Earlier that day, McGovern was signing copies of his new book, The Essential America, at BookHampton, in East Hampton. Of his nine total books, he claimed this was the best.

The "Spotlight" film One Bright Shining Moment: The Forgotten Summer of George McGovern, tells the story of what might have happened if McGovern had defeated Nixon in 1972, and of what the world might be like today. Produced, written and directed by Stephen Vittoria, this two-hour film details the campaign of McGovern, who was the Senator most ardently opposed to the Vietnam War. It shows how he rose up, from his simple country life on a South Dakota farm to become a teacher, and then gave up his tenured position to pursue a career in politics, with the support of his devoted wife. They traveled all over the country, campaigning for his Presidential race.

In this political documentary, Vittoria intersperses fascinating narration and interviews with some of the key insiders during this race, including McGovern's campaign manager, Gary Hart, his biographer, Thomas Knock, Gore

Following the screening, Wainscott author and Plum TV host Steven Gaines interviewed McGovern and Vittoria on the stage of Guild Hall. The Senator commented that this was the first time he had ever seen this film, which had just finished production a few weeks before the festival. McGovern also brought along an entourage of friends including his biographer, Thomas Knock, a professor in Dallas, Texas.

"Seeing this movie for the first time, it really brings back this moment in time, and I thank the filmmaker, Stephen Vittoria, for accurately capturing this era," said McGovern. "I was delighted to see Stephen's talent, ability and judgment."

When Gaines asked Vittoria why he decided to make this film, and why it took him all these years to get it out, Vittoria said, "I became a political atheist after the 1972 election, when times changed with the Nixon era, and I lost all interest for a while. I felt that McGovern was the last honest man who we could trust. But then lately, I began to think about how the world might be a different place, had Nixon lost to McGovern, and I wanted to revisit this important time in history, especially in light of what's been happening after 9/11." Vittoria added, "It took me all these years to raise the Vidal, Gloria Steinem, Warren Beatty, and Dick Gregory. There are also many interviews with McGovern himself, plus much excellent footage from this era during the late 1960s and 1970s. The movie also has many songs from this era as a background to the action, which also pull the viewer back to that era.

all aspects of the industry from all around the country and abroad. There are producers here to meet distributors, screenwriters here to meet set designers, directors here to meet actors.

In many ways, as the local residents — most of whom have no prior connection with the industry — walk around going from one film to another or from a party thrown by a film crew to a lecture given by a respected elder in a particular field of film, and they go from being just a fly on the wall, which is what they would be if this were a festival for, say flamenco dancers, to being a part of things.

For one thing, there is no way for anyone to tell that you are not a director or a filmmaker or an actor — we all look alike — so everybody is always meeting everybody and exchanging business cards and that now includes you — but more important, you actually ARE now part of the industry. Your opinion counts. You are asked it all the time. You are the actual, in the moment, audience and judge of the films, not only by your applause or praise or by your decision to even buy a ticket to one thing or another, but by your votes. Just before a film begins, a festival Board Member gets up and reminds you to fill out the ballot you were given as you came in — you can rate a film excellent, very good, good, fair or poor — and hand it in on your way out. At the end of the festival, they count the votes and award a prize to the audience favorites.

It is not expensive to be part of this. Even if you are not wearing a festival badge around your neck that identifies you as a part of the industry with all the privileges thereto, you can buy tickets. The cost of going to any one of these films for the general public — and these are pre-selected and very excellent films, many of them not yet released anywhere — is about $25 each. For about $150 you can fill yourself up with all the festival you can handle over five days, and certainly all the popcorn.

A friend of mine who has nothing to do with the film industry was out for the weekend, and we went to four different films, and listened to what the director or the lead actor or the cinematographer had to say about their film either before or after the showing.

On Sunday, she left for points west.

"I really enjoyed this film festival," she said.

"Next year, when they are getting ready to hold it again," I said, "I'm sure they'll give you a call to have you come back."

money for this film."

During questions from the audience, someone asked McGovern about the parallels between his era and today. "I think we've been deceived, with the government convincing us that Iraq was a threat with weapons of mass destruction, which is total fiction," he said. "The parallels to Vietnam are extraordinary, like how we were told, the Domino Theory, about how Thailand, Burma and the Philippines would fall, all the way down to our country, if we didn't fight there. I was in Vietnam on about four trips, and recently I was amazed at how they warmly received Americans today."

Gaines asked what McGovern's recommendations are for our world situation today, to which he said, "I think there's a lack of morals and ethics in the White House today, and they know better than to say Saddam Hussein was behind 9/11. I think a new occupation in the White House would help, and I think Kerry is a straightforward, direct man. I think highly of him, and how he conducted himself bravely in Vietnam, but later came out against it."

McGovern also said the current administration has made the War on Terrorism the central issue in the campaign, but also important is many domestic and other problems, such as global warming, lack of health insurance, and the rampant rate of alcoholism, which has killed thousands of people, including McGovern's own daughter, Terry.

Since he just finished the movie recently, Vittoria said he is now seeking distribution of the film around the country. Following the October 22 screening, McGovern and his entourage went for dinner at O'Malley's Restaurant in East Hampton.

The successful South Florida real estate developer R. Donahue Peebles rented in Noyac this summer, fell in love with the Hamptons and spent some time house hunting for a vacation property he could call his own. As I write this I do not know if he was successful or not. But I did spend a late morning with him and his wife and son in their rented mansion in Noyac just before Labor Day.

Peebles is a major real estate developer, who started in Washington, but now works in Florida, where he restored the Royal Palm on Miami Beach, the second largest hotel on the strip, and is currently re-building the venerable Bath Club there. It was originally constructed by Carl Fisher for wealthy New Yorkers vacationing in the 1920s. He is adding a magnificent $165 million dollar oceanfront condominium tower to the 6.5-acre oceanfront project. He notes that because of his color, he would have been prevented from being a member of this club in its earlier years. Now, he is the owner and developer of the property. He is also serving a second term as the President of the Greater Miami Convention and Business Bureau.

Peebles was born and raised in Petworth, a middle class area of Washington, D.C., the son of a career civil servant father and a mother who was a secretary in a real estate sales office. His parents divorced when he was six years old, however, and the experience made a young man out of Peebles way before time.

"I worked cleaning offices at age ten to thirteen," he said, "I had a paper route and I considered myself the man of the house. At 11, I would come home from school and take care of my own meals. I was mature and serious."

Peebles' mother developed a major career as a real estate appraiser after the divorce. A hard worker, she formed her own company, remarried, lived in Maryland for awhile and then moved with Peebles to Detroit where she saw opportunity in what was in fact an imploding city at that time, the early 1970s. Buildings were being abandoned, torn down, the property sold. There was plenty of work for an independent appraiser.

Peebles, who had gone to the Friends School in Washington for his early education, at first lived in downtown Detroit with his mother, but soon moved with her to the more successful suburbs outside the city.

"There was integration in the auto industry," Peebles said. "But the schools were still segregated. I should have gone to a black school, but instead, my mom enrolled me in a new Friends School in Detroit that had been recently founded by the Quakers. This was a school for the children of business leaders who wanted lots of diversity. I got a scholarship there."

At school, Peebles was a leader, involving himself in basketball, baseball and track. He Congress. It was arranged by John Conyers, a Congressman from Detroit, who got Congressman Ron Dellums of California to take him on. Donahue was able to finish his high school education at the High School for Pages on Capitol Hill.

"My tenure as a page lasted from Carter's first State of the Union to his second State of the Union. It was very insightful to see Congressmen working on legislation. Dellums had a very relaxed office. He was anti-war and anti-spending and very pessimistic about everything and he was often on the losing side. After my term as a page, I worked for Conyers, who was a behind the scenes kind of guy, an insider and a snappy dresser. He became the senior member of the Judiciary committee."

A page transports documents, acts as a go-fer, helps out in any way he is asked. Donahue Peebles worked the job from 6 to 7:30 after school, then played basketball for two hours, went home, had dinner at 10, slept, and at 4:30 am went off to school. He was 16 years old.

"I learned time management," Peebles said, flashing a smile.

Peebles' mom now ran her own appraisal business in Washington. His dad continued as a clerk for the government, working as an auto mechanic on the side. Peebles thought he would study to be a doctor.

"I had started going to New York City when I was 13 or 14 years old. And I had an idea I would try to be a physician there. I had an uncle in Detroit, a physician, who had moved to Newark, and we would visit him. By the time I graduated high school, I was ready to think about moving away. I got accepted at Rutgers as a pre-med."

Peebles lived at first with his uncle, but soon got his own apartment in East Orange. He loved New York City, often going to Studio 54. Besides school, he worked for Congressman Peter Rodino for a while, and also worked for his uncle at his medical office in New Brunswick.

"After one year, I decided I didn't want to be a doctor after all," Peebles said. "So I thought I'd take a break and move back to Washington. There I got a real estate appraiser's license of my own."

At the age of 20, Peebles went to work for his mother at Shannon and Luxe, one of the major real estate companies in Washington at the time. He also worked for a friend of hers, Milton Tillery, who worked for the Senate Joint Economic Committee. Peebles was learning real estate and he was learning politics.

"After six months at home, I got a studio apartment," Peebles said. "I liked living alone."

At 16, however, Peebles moved with his mother back to Washington where, through her connections in the real estate, business and political community, she was able to get young Donahue an appointment as a Page in

I also wanted to go into real estate development. What I saw that worked was buying a property, keeping it, leasing it and having a management company take care of it. Then you could move on."

During that period, which was 1979-1980, however, interest rates were very high and there were not many sales. But there were lots of appraisals.

"This pause in the market gave me an opportunity to learn value and the fundamentals of real estate."

Peebles did commercial appraising while his mother did residential appraising. With political connections to the Mayor, they were a much sought after team.

At the age of 23, Peebles was appointed to the City of Washington's Property Appeals Board. He soon became chairman and thus became a "player." And at the age of 24, he set up his own appraisal business, with offices in Georgetown. His first client was HUD.

"I looked for development opportunities for myself, found a few, but they didn't work out. Then, when I was 26, I was asked to appraise a site in Washington for an urban redevelopment project. The project included a 100,000 square foot building on 2 acres. A prospective buyer had a letter from the government saying they would lease the building, but the man who was selling it had a high price and the buyer said he was not paying it. I ran the numbers, called the buyer and told him I would pay his price, set up the financing and got the government to lease most of it. I then got a bank to lease there, too. I still own this property today."

In 1985, at the age of 25, Peebles bought a house in Georgetown for himself, paying the huge sum for that time of $900,000. "I didn't spend a lot of money other than buying that house," he said. "But there it was."

Beginning in 1989, Peebles began a tax appeal business. Washington was, like Detroit before it, going into recession, and with his connections, Peebles was in an excellent position to make appeals to the tax board for lowering the tax assessments of his clients. He worked on a contingency basis and he had 12 clients at first, including the Mayflower Hotel, Bass Brothers and others. He won every appeal. Soon he had hundreds of clients.

In 1990, he met Katrina, who was to become his wife.

"I was in Georgetown, and I saw her cross the street. She smiled and I smiled. Then she went into a hair salon. I called the hair salon but there was no answer. So I went over and stopped in. But just as I was going in, she came out."

Their first date was to New York City, to see Gypsy and Phantom of the Opera. They stayed at the Royalton.

Peebles did several other developments in Washington, including the 200,000 square foot American Psychological Association building, and the Washington Marriott. He now owns and leases more than one million square feet in Washington.

But a big change for him came in 1998 when he bought a vacation home in Miami Beach. At the time, his son, R. Donahue Peebles, Jr., was five years old. He needed stability and he thought it would be better for his son if he were to move his main operations there. He soon opened a Miami office.

"It was a quality of life decision," he said.

Peebles quickly became involved in a city-run competition to find a developer for the Royal Palm Hotel, the second largest in town. At the time, Miami was still licking its wounds from a black ordered boycott because of a political slight made in 1994. Nelson Mandela had come to town, and the city fathers gave him the cold shoulder. The black community thought it was a racial thing, but the slight had occurred shortly after Mandela had nice things to say about Fidel Castro, the sworn enemy of the Miami Cuban population. Now in 1998, the City was trying to make amends by limiting the competition for the Royal Palm — which would be assisted financially by the city — to only black developers. By a small margin, Peebles won that competition and, using his considerable skills, built what stands there today.

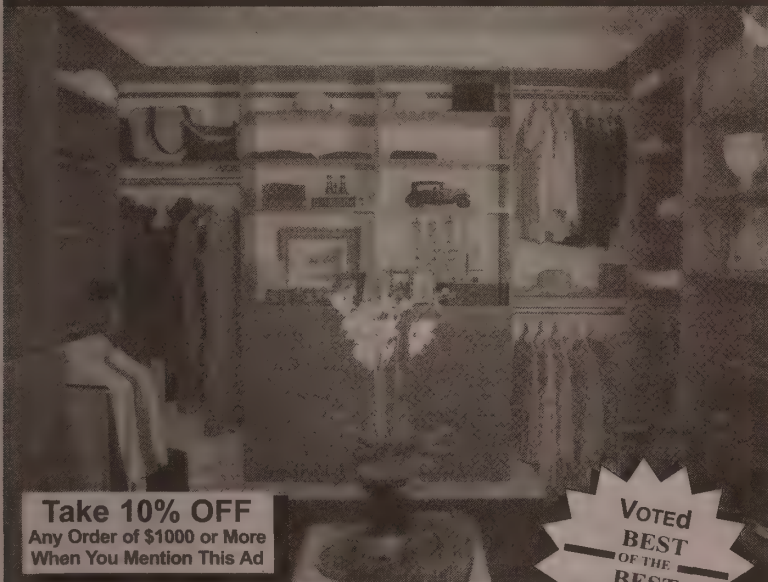

Now, at 44, he has come to the Hamptons.

"Why here?" I asked.

"Katrina and I started coming out here years ago," he said. "Many people from Washington have houses here. We rented in Amagansett for a while, and we had a house on Ocean Road in once rented a house near another such beach.

A former nanny for the Ammon's twin children, Krista Zvanitjas, testified that hours before the murder, she went to Generosa's Manhattan apartment after receiving a call from Pelosi claiming that Generosa had been drinking heavily, was "being aggressive" and didn't want to take the children to a scheduled soccer game. When Zvanitjas arrived, Pelosi told her that Generosa was asleep, as he had slipped a sedative in her beer. She testified that Pelosi said, "Ted is at it again. Ted is not going to give her half [of his net worth]. He has to be a man, and somebody needs to knock some sense into him." Zvanitjas also said that Pelosi had a good relationship with Ammon's children.

According to the deposition testimony of one of Generosa's lawyers, Michael G. Dowd, which was read into the record, while Generosa was terminally ill with cancer, Pelosi told Dowd that he went to Ammon's house the weekend of the murder and took the hard drive for the surveillance system, because (Pelosi claimed) it showed Generosa talking to some men during the summer before the murder about killing Ammon. The statement was apparently made in the context of negotiations which resulted in the signing of a post-nuptial agreement between Generosa and Pelosi, and the payment to Pelosi of $2 million. Pelosi now claims that he did not understand that he was giving up inheritance rights.

GHOULED HALL HALLOWEEN AT GUILD HALL

Written by one one of

By Kelly Krieger

Halloween brings out the kid in everyone. Whether you have children or just enjoy attending the annual parades and parties, there's definitely enough fun to be had by all. Haunted hayrides, haunted houses, scary movies, clever costumes and much more.

Those of us who dared to walk through the doors of Ghoulded Hall in East Hampton definitely had the demons scared out of us.

It was on Halloween Eve that I convinced my friend Tom to accompany me on this chilling journey. At approximately 9:45 p.m. we approached the main entrance. The warm red glow combined with spooky music to set the stage.

We were greeted by several "creepy keepers of the house" and escorted to the next room. Unfortunately, we just missed the first cluster of people by seconds. Another grim reaper informed us that we could catch up, but after hearing the screams in the background while looking into the abyss of darkness, I decided to wait. I warned Tom that I freak out at these things, but I had no idea it would be this bad.

I always think safety in numbers. The advantage of traveling in a group is that you can push the others in front of you for protection if you become suffocated by fear.

While we waited in the theater, we sat in a special booth and watched the big screen. All weekend they played horror classics such as Dracula, Frankenstein and The Creature from the Black Lagoon in the John Drew Theater. I thought to myself that I could stay in here and watch the movies while Tom went through the journey of terror. But our guide and "maid of torcher" abruptly appeared from behind, screaming, "Charlie are you ready?" We all jumped out of our seats and quickly followed.

I intended to walk somewhere in the middle of our group (the buffer zone), but it didn't work out that way. Two couples in front headed on the path, tightly holding hands and then Tom and I followed. It was pitch black as we walked through a maze. The only way we could find our way was to use our hands to feel around while walking up and down ramps and over squishy floors. Apologies to the couple in front of me, I'm quite certain I grabbed "Charlie" a few times. Trust me, we couldn't see a thing, which added to the fast beating of my heart and the sweatiness of my hands. I ran into the wall (something I have also done in the light of day), and continued to follow the screams, uncertain of what I would encounter next.

Finally, we could see. We emerged in the middle of a fog-filled area that included a few trees with a psychedelic spinning white light, blinding our vision once again. To top it off, there was some sort of creature of the dark crouched on the floor, peering at us like it was going to jump up any second and drag one of us away.

At this point I wanted it to be over, but there was no turning back now. Our next obstacle would involve crawling on our knees through a gauze-covered tunnel. I crawled as fast as I could while being grabbed at the ankle once and I jumped up only to be greeted by yet another scary ghoulish character. We then arrived in a room that was set up like a satanic movie set from the 70s. It seemed like we were going to be part of some devilish ritual. A man in a leather mask and several others wore red velvet hooded capes. Music and dialogue drew us intently into the scene. We were part of this sacrificial ritual and it felt like the real thing. The leader, who was sporting a leather mask, tied the sacrificial lamb (in this case a woman in a red cape) to the table and slit her throat. Then, they all drank from her blood (corn syrup and red dye of course) out of a gold urn. One of the cult members pointed to me to drink from it as well, but I refused. However, brave Charlie and Tom joined in. I thought that was the finale, but I was wrong.

The door opened and our guide directed us down a long hallway. I hate these scenarios. I knew that something would jump out at us and I was exhausted from all the previous excitement. We passed a room with a television playing only static, a room with an old lady tied up chanting and then, and then, the roaring sound of a chainsaw came from behind. From the second I heard the sound, I bolted like George Costanza in the "Seinfeld" episode when he was at a children's birthday party and someone yelled "Fire!" I left everyone in my wake while I turned and ran. I guess it was really convincing and I let my imagination run away with me.

I continued to sprint out the door only to find myself outdoors in a foggy graveyard filled with zombie-like creatures, vampires and ghouls jumping out from every direction. All I could think was that it was never going to end. I was surrounded and was beginning to feel like the main character in a horror movie. Just how big was this haunted hall? After fighting off all the ghouls, zombies and other frightening creatures of the night, we exited through a gate and arrived at safety.

The adrenalin rush was great. I haven't had that much fun in years and I was glad that we made it through. At least I know that if my writing career heads south, I can certainly get a part in some low-budget horror flick. I'm officially a "Screaming Mary."

Thanks to Guild Hall, Josh Gladstone and his dedicated staff of actors and volunteers for a wonderfully ghoulish Halloween adventure. Over 1,000 attended over the three-day event. Don't miss it next year. I know I'll be back for more thrills.

pre-performance costuming and rehearsal not under his own power, but driven to Meeting House Lane by his father, Martin Raber, a former Suffolk County Police officer, who said that Brian hadn't been feeling well and he thought it best to bring him to Southampton instead of having him drive alone. They parked out front. And Martin accompanied Brian inside.

Brian Raber got into his blue and gold Civil War uniform, and walked into the kitchen of the building, backstage, where actors Bianca Massi and Marie Sellers were drinking coffee and talking. Raber approached Massi and stared at her expressionlessly. Then he slapped her hard across the face.

"Why are you trying to ruin my life?" he shouted.

Toni Munna, hearing Massi scream, ran in and, as the director, got between the two. She asked Raber what was going on. He pushed Munna aside and began to walk toward the back exit. Munna followed him. Why did you do that? she asked. He walked out the back door, and as Munna came out the door behind him, he turned and said, even louder, "Why are you trying to ruin my life?" and hauled off and slugged her in the face with his fist. She fell to the ground and he came after her, continuing to hit her.

At this point, set designer Robert Dowling appeared, and Raber stopping hitting Munna, looked up at Dowling expressionlessly, Dowling said later, and then got up and walked off toward his father's car.

The police were called. An ambulance arrived. Both Munna and Massi were taken to nearby Southampton Hospital where Massi was treated for a bruise and some scratches and released, and Munna was admitted. She had suffered serious injury, including two breaks in her right cheekbone and a break in her eye socket. She was taken upstairs, and soon brought into surgery, where the damage was repaired and she was to remain for the next four days. She may need further surgery.

As for Brian Raber, he was found by the police, still in uniform, sitting in the front seat of his father's car. He was upset and angry, the police said, but he offered no resistance. He was taken to the Riverhead Jail, and the next morning appeared in court where he was arraigned for two charges, assault in the first degree, which is a felony, and assault in the third degree, a misdemeanor. He has no criminal record. The judge ordered him to be held on $100,000 bail and ordered a psychiatric study of his condition, which is currently underway. He is being represented by attorney Thomas Spreer of Bay Shore. Spreer does not dispute anything about what happened. He said Raber's family is extremely upset, not only for their son, but also for the victims and their families. They cannot explain what happened.

But there is a theory.

Seven years earlier, Brian Raber's older brother committed suicide. This was on October 20, 1997, and though there has never been any explanation for it, it hit younger brother Brian particularly hard. His father says Brian has exhibited symptoms of depression, particularly around the anniversary date of that event.

Maybe Brian just snapped.

This writer has no explanation of why Brian Raber assaulted these two women, but I can offer the following thoughts.

When I was in school, I performed in many regional theatre productions in the area. I was President of the Drama Society in high school and appeared in the senior play. In college, in my freshman year, I joined an avante garde theatre group and performed in numerous plays by Ionesco and Beckett, but my career ended abruptly when I was selected for the lead role in an Arthur Laurents play, Home of the Brave.

This play was set on an island in the Pacific during the second World War. The Japanese held the island, and I played an American soldier, one of five who formed a reconnaissance unit for the invading force designed to dislodge the Japanese and take the Island as part of the American advance. We had landed successfully, and now we were stopped just short of the jungle, where, we believed, Japanese snipers were waiting for us, posted in the tops of the palm trees.

The play concerned the dynamics of the relationships between the various members of the unit. My role was as Coney (as in Coney Island), and as the only Jew in the company I was being bitterly ridiculed by three of the four other members of the unit. Although I had to take this in silence, the fourth soldier, who abhorred bigotry, would come to my defense against the others. And he and I had therefore become friends.

We moved forward. Then machine gun fire broke out, we fired back, and we retreated in an orderly fashion back to our starting position down by the beach. But there was someone missing. My friend.

Then we heard him, off in the jungle, crying out, He was being tortured by the Japanese, calling to us to come and rescue him. I tried to break free of the remaining four to rush to his aid, but I was held down and pinned to the ground. He would have to die out there. There was nothing we could do.

I broke down at this point, in the final rehearsal, before the performance. I was supposed to break down and beg these people to come with me to get my friend. They would have none of it. But in reality, on stage in that rehearsal, I broke down beyond acting, into hysteria. The rehearsal stopped. I continued weeping. And I had to be helped off the stage.

A half hour later, we tried again with the same result.

By mutual consent, it was decided that I could not continue in this role. I remember being told they could not trust that I could act through this and do it as Mr. Laurents wrote it. I remember saying I had exams coming up for some of my classes and the rehearsal had been so upsetting I feared I would not be able to study for them. They found somebody else.

And that was the end of my acting career. Nobody got hurt. Nobody went to jail. But I was a mess for a day or two.

Years later, up in Northwest, I ran into Arthur Laurents at a party at the home of playwright Jimmy Kirkwood. Most of the cast of A Chorus Line was there. It was a fine time. I cornered Laurents and told him how much I liked his work and then tried to explain what had happened in my attempt to play the character Coney. But he seemed puzzled by what I was saying. And I never was able to get across to him the full meaning of what had happened to me. Perhaps we both had had too many drinks at the time.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #323 Leaf Me Alone

I love autumn, but it needs to be a little longer and it needs to be either windier or not windy at all.

We are now at that time when the leaves begin to fall. When they land in the yard it's kinda nice to see the crazy quilt of reds, yellows and browns that they create. We watch as the leaves fly like little kites past our windows and we listen for that sound of a crisp leaf scratching against the side of the house. We hear the hard stem hit the sidewalk with a distinctive tap that we are so familiar with, we don't even consciously hear it. We shuffle down sidewalks enjoying swishing the leaves as we go. It's not something we really talk about, but I think everyone shares that feeling. The scratchy sounds of leaves having drag races along the sidewalk is the early herald of the smells of pumpkin pie, stuffed turkey, and mashed potatoes with gravy. That Currier & Ives family picture of Thanksgiving starts to surface from our subconscious.

But first we must get past leaf-raking season. A time fraught with family and neighborhood discussions and arguments.

Theoretically, everyone should rake up and bag all the leaves that fall from their trees in their yard. But, like communism, the theory is perfect, the problems only start when you add people.

I have three Maple trees in my yard and two uncooperative teenagers. That means I rake as much as I can when I can.

When children are small, they want to help you because they think raking leaves is fun. That's good for about fifteen minutes, then they discover that you've tricked them into doing work, so they stop. Then you think you can outsmart them by telling them you're raking the leaves into a pile so they can jump in the pile. That works. They rake a pile and you get pictures of them jumping in and swimming through the leaves. That's good for about fifteen minutes, then the novelty has worn off and they want to go inside. You tell them to stay and help you rake these leaves up and bag them. They do the slowest and crappiest job they possibly can, but you resolve that no matter how slow they go they are going to help you! They carry a handful of leaves at a time and drop them into the bag from a height sufficient to allow half the handful to blow away before it hits the bag. They gripe and complain loudly. That's good for about fifteen minutes, then you decide you'd rather do it alone and enjoy the fresh air and quiet than listen to all the whining.

The neighbor on one side of me has no trees in his yard and the neighbor on the other side has evergreens. The neighbor with the evergreens rakes whatever falls in his yard, whether it's my leaves or leaves that the wind has brought from other neighbors. He adheres to the philosophy of leaf and let leaf.

My neighbor with no trees has a divine gift I call MapleVision. He has a special set of cones and rods in his eyes that allows him to look at a maple leaf and determine its tree of origin. He can tell which leaves are mine and which leaves belong to his neighbor on his other side. He rakes my leaves over into my yard. It takes him hours sometimes. He lets me know the rough equivalent of how many bags of leaves he raked back into my yard and the time spent doing it and what shows he missed as a result. He asks me when I plan to rake so leaves don't blow back into his yard. I truly do my level best to keep him leafless. But right now the leaves are falling as fast as I can rake them. So I've thought of a few options: I can spray glue on the trees to give me a week to catch up with what's already on the ground; I can get a leaf blower and just blow them all down and get it over with all at once; I can wait for a couple of windy days to carry most of my leaves away and distribute them all over the neighborhood. My maple leaves look like everyone else's I know most of my neighbors can't distinguish mine from theirs, only he, with his MapleVision knows for sure. He reminds me of the quote from Henry David Thoreau, "I love mankind, it's my neighbor I can't stand."

Comtesse Therese Upcoming Releases

With wines and a winery that are winning awards left and right—including "Best New Winery" in Dan's Papers' annual "Best of the Best" contest—you'd think that Theresa Dilworth of Comtesse Therese could take a little time to relax and enjoy her early success.

In the wine world, it just doesn't work that way.

As a boutique winery that focuses on quality over quantity, award-winning wines means one thing for Dilworth—they sell out quickly.

Her wines, available exclusively at The Tasting Room locations in Peconic and Jamesport, have been flying off the shelves for months. All of the reds are gone already, including the Hungarian Oak Merlot, which was named the Best Merlot in New York State this past summer.

With demand for Comtesse Therese wines at an all-time high, it was probably tempting to release the new vintages before they were ready, but an unwavering focus on making great wine has prevailed.

I was lucky enough recently to taste five new and upcoming releases with Dilworth, her consultant winemaker Bernard Cannac, and her assistant winemaker Lisa Julian Cannac. The new wines are coming and there's ample reason to be excited.

First we tasted the 2002 Comtesse Therese Rosé ($12), a bright, lively rosé without the cloying sweetness of many you'll find in the U.S. If you don't think you like pink wine, give this fruity one a try. It's simply delicious with fresh goat cheese or on its own as an aperitif.

The 2003 Comtesse Therese Russian Oak Chardonnay ($18), builds on the tasty success of 2002 vintage. Just bottled a couple months ago, this barrel fermented and aged charmer is full and luscious without being heavy or over-oaked. With toasty vanilla and beautiful underlying fruitiness, it's much more Burgundy than California. Try it out of the fridge, but then savor it as it warms a little.

Though still young, the 2002 Comtesse Therese Traditional Merlot ($18) displayed a complex combination of rich fruitiness and smoky oak with hints of dark chocolate. Aged in both American and French barrels, with 5 percent Cabernet Sauvignon thrown in, it's an elegant pour that grew and developed with each sip.

The next bottle, the 2002 Comtesse Therese Cabernet Sauvignon ($25), is the first Cabernet release for the winery. Full and extremely smooth, it's filled with classic cherry aromas and a nice amount of earthiness. In the mouth, the cherries remain, joined by soft, but structured tannins. Without a doubt, this is already one of the top Cabernet Sauvignons on the Island, and my favorite of the tasting.

Dan's North Fork

By Susan Whitney Simm

A few short years ago, the North Fork's sleepy harborfront village of Greenport came alive with several new dining destinations worth the trip. Most have appropriately nautical themes inspired by the surrounding sea and turn-of-the-century Victorian architecture, but the one that consistently continues to dazzle with its stylish Manhattan ambiance and superb fare is named for a bivalve rarely seen on its changing menu: The Frisky Oyster.

Co-owners Dennis McDermott and Hank Tomashevski (responsible for a not-to-be-missed chocolate pot de crème) are proving they have what it takes to make it in a risky business in what remains a somewhat seasonal region, Long Island's East End. Dennis, who has been training intensively for the NYC Marathon (he's running this Sunday), knows all regulars by name and greets everyone on busy weekend nights when reservations are definitely required, even in winter.

Since I reviewed this restaurant last summer, there has been a change in the kitchen staff, though the transition is so seamless as to be almost unnoticeable. Former chef Greg Ling has since moved on, and has been replaced by Ross Essner, a major talent who lost his kitchen when the Shady Lady Inn, on Greenport's North Road, recently closed. Perhaps the seamlessness is in part a result of Greg and Ross' previous association, before Greg replaced Ross (who was moving to Greenport) at Philadelphia's trendy hot spot Rx after working as his sous chef at Bleu, in Philly's ritzy Rittenhouse Square.

Speaking of bivalves, on a visit before Greg's departure I was lucky enough to sample what remains a personal best-of-all-time mussel dish, made with blood orange juice and fresh fennel. Despite slightly fussy ingredients, I have yet to taste its equal. But if a recent visit, with Ross now at the helm, is any indication, patrons new and old are in for some truly excellent eats.

Dennis and Hank are very hands-on owners, and it shows in the consistency of the food and the service. The decision to bring Ross onboard seems a natural choice for what the owners clearly want the restaurant to be, a chic but welcoming haven for everyone who loves well-prepared, simple but fabulous food.

The menu changes almost nightly, though a few staples can usually be counted upon. A recent visit proved that the country salad with crispy pancetta, roasted garlic and gorgonzola, and a toss of romaine hearts with applewood smoked bacon, shaved red onion and a Maytag blue cheese dressing (each $10) still make regular appearances. Both are delicious. A new addition, a tapas plate of Serrano ham, pequinillo peppers, saffron shrimp, Manchego cheese, grilled eggplant and tapenade croutons ($12) would make excellent amuses bouches for a party of four or a shared appetizer for two. But the showstopper of the night was the plate of spicy Szechwan pork ribs with Asian slaw ($12). The spice-infused meat fell from the bone into a pool of dark brown sauce that was perfectly foiled by the cool, vinegary strips of slaw.

Entrees included a "cowboy" rib eye steak ($30) rubbed with chili powder and other spices sitting atop a flavor-packed salad of incredible, local heirloom tomatoes in rainbow shades soaked in a marinade redolent of balsamic vinegar. The steak was topped with crisp Vidalia onion rings and drew raves from the person who ordered it and jealousy from those who didn't. A double pork chop with mashed sweet potatoes was only slightly less satisfying, having some tough competition in the steak. Pan-seared sea scallops ($28) atop a saffron-infused risotto were treated to a coat of irresistible lobster "nage," a sauce concentrated with lobster flavor via reduction. It was sublime over the scallops, which also shared the plate with a small, pungent sauté of broccoli rabe. A Long Island duck breast, served medium rare and sliced atop pickled red cabbage was another star in its luscious sauce, especially with its accompanying duck and goat cheese stuffed "cigar" made from pastry.

Though we didn't try it, a pan-roasted fillet of striped bass ($28) looked soothing and inviting at a nearby table, and the standard steak frites ($29) always on the menu (at least during my visits) is as good a version of this classic bistro dish as any I have tried.

Desserts always include a very good Key lime pie and chocolate soufflé cake, but as mentioned earlier, the outstanding finale here is the pot de crème. Order it if available.

Frisky Oyster's wine list is diverse, with bottles from Argentina, New Zealand, Mexico and Spain in addition to France, California, Italy and the East End. Recent by-the-glass offerings included a good, dry Rosé – a Grenache – from Alto Adige, Italy ($8) and the meritage style red Ravenswood Vintner's Blend ($9) from Sonoma. Also new is the introduction of a flight of very interesting dessert wines ($14) including Castello di Borghese's wonderful Late Harvest Riesling Allegra (dessert by itself) and the fascinating Dulce Monastrell from Bodegas Olivares of Spain. This wine is full of mulberry aromas and rich prune and raisin flavors. I have never tasted anything quite like it.

Frisky Oyster is currently open Wednesday-Sunday for dinner until 10 p.m., later on weekends.

Before the tasting was over, a chilled, unlabelled bottle was uncorked and poured. Pinkish-copper, it looked like a rosé, but quite different from the first one we had tasted. When I took a sip, I knew immediately that it was unlike any other wine made in Long Island wine country. The 2002 Comtesse Therese Blanc de Noir is what I would call a semi-dessert wine made with Cabernet Sauvignon grapes (instead of the Merlot of the earlier Rosé). Beautifully floral on the nose with hints of honey-suckle, it offers light, bright peach fruitiness on the tongue, is slightly sweet and definitely delicious. It cries out alongside simple angel food cake or fruits.

These new wines will be released over the next couple of months, so keep an eye out for them at The Tasting Room and at www.tasting-room.com.

And, Dilworth recently purchased the old Jamesport Saddlery in Aquebogue with plans to open a French-style bistro that will focus on fresh, local ingredients and, of course, Long Island wines. Renovations are under way and the bistro should open in late 2005 or early 2006.

Away At School... By DAVID LION RATTINER

Dance Riot

The entire city of Boston was silent during the bottom of the ninth inning in Game Four of the World Series. I was at my part time job as a valet parker and I was getting really nervous. I had four cars left in the garage and I knew that if the Red Sox were to win, there would be no way I was going to be able to get anyone their cars, because of all of the traffic. I was an emotional mess. A part of me wanted the Red Sox to win, another part of me wanted them to lose. I was afraid of the uproar that would follow a win. I was expecting rioters, looters, but most importantly, car flippers. I was so sure that the four cars that I was responsible for were going to get flipped over that I ran inside of the restaurant and told the manager, "This is a problem. If the Red Sox win there is no way I'll be able to get those cars back up front. I'm just going to find the people and give them their keys."

I started to run around the restaurant, earnestly searching for the four people. I'd say, "Are these your keys? Did you valet?" Anyone could have said yes and I would have given them keys, but I'm pretty sure that I got the right keys to the right people. Well...no, I'm positive. For the sake of this article I'm positive that I got the right keys to the right people.

Then it happened.

There was an uproar in the restaurant like nothing I had ever heard before. Guys were jumping up and down and giving each other high fives. People were hugging one another and yelling profanities right in the middle of this fancy restaurant.

Everyone, and I mean everyone, had at least one bottle of champagne at their table that fired out a cork into the middle of the room. I had to get outside and see what was going on.

I ran outside to see, surprisingly, that the streets were empty. My cell phone rang and it was my Dad. "David, are you okay?"

"Yeah, I'm fine."

"Well, stay out of the streets. There are going to be riots."

"I'm right in the middle of the street down town. I had to work."

"You're in the middle of the street?"

"Yeah."

"Well, get the hell out of there!"

I flipped my cell phone off and started jogging. Cars started pouring down the street as horns honked and guys with beer bellies and without shirts were hooting and hollering. A big, fat guy wearing just his underwear started running down the middle of the street, jumping in the air and clicking his heels together. There were music students from Berklee marching down the middle, playing the theme song to Rocky. Everyone was jumping up and down, almost oblivious to what was going on around them, which of course, was mayhem. Break dancers formed a circle in the middle of an intersection and started dancing to the beats of a boom box that was blasting on full volume.

Then of course, there were the police. Police on horseback and in riot gear all started dancing with the Berklee college boys, who were now playing the song, "Beat It" by Michael Jackson. I was really impressed with the Boston police dancing skills. The horses were jumping over police officers, who were all doing acrobatics to the music. Then of course, the firemen came out to outdo the police officers. The crowd started cheering as the entire Boston Fire Department came out with fire trucks, fire hats, and fire jackets. The music then changed to "We Didn't Start the Fire," by Billy Joel. The firemen started using hoses in their dance number. They turned on the water and started stripping down to bare chests. One fireman got on top of the water hose and shot himself up in the air and did a double back flip then landed on top of a fireman pyramid that was formed right in the middle of the street. At the end of their song, all of them lit cigars as hundreds of women mobbed them and started making out with them. What a celebration.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Movies

I like movies. I like blockbusters, Indy flicks, drama, Oscar contenders, heck, I even like truly bad movies. Sometimes it's fun to sit around with some likeminded friends and watch the best of the worst. I recommend Infested, shot right here on the North Fork. We've had a week to rest after the gift of the Hamptons International Film Festival, but now that the weather is getting colder, movies are still a very valid activity. You needn't feel guilty for not going outside. Our area has some terrific theaters, but sometimes they just don't have it all. This week or any week, really, go to Manhattan and catch some of the films you might not get a chance to see at your local UA. I'll admit, it's actually been a while since I've seen a movie in New York City, so this is a project we can do together.

The most famous and my all-time favorite art-house in the city is the Angelika Film Center down on Houston Street in Soho. Technically, the theater is on the north side of Houston and Soho stands for South of Houston, but I digress. Angelika is best known for showing quality independent and art films, and many times is the first theater around to run movies that eventually become big enough to hit the major chains. They also do regular revival screenings of modern classics. I saw Goodfellas there in college. I never thought I'd get to see it on the big screen, and Angelika changed that for me. The original Angelika Film Center and Café opened in 1989, in 1997 a franchise opened in Houston, Texas and another opened in Dallas in the summer of 2001. Most recently, they opened in Plano, Texas. In New York, the café isn't bad. Go early and sit. Enjoy the spacious room with proper design, a chandelier and large pillars. Read

Angelika InFocus, their programming guide. It's even nicer to relax there afterwards and discuss the movie over a cup of coffee or a snack. For some reason they go on and on about the double latte in their PR. I drink my coffee black, so I couldn't tell you why. If you like double lattes, maybe the Angelika's is superior. Maybe it's just an artsy thing to drink. I really don't know, but forget the coffee – the movies are always good or at least thought provoking.

In the East Village, Angelika's sister theater, Village East Cinemas, has a bit more commercial stuff as well as some of the more prominent independents, including premieres of many independent films, both good and bad. It was originally a Yiddish theater built in 1926. The interior is perfectly restored, and retains the original ornate Moorish design inside and out. The main auditorium has stadium seating and a massive screen. They are located at 2nd Avenue and 12th Street.

If you enjoy the giant screen and tremendous theater, the Ziegfeld Theater is a must. I'd really only recommend going for the huge movie events they are most famous for. The Ziegfeld is one of the few surviving single-screen movie houses in the city. Openings of blockbusters like The Phantom Menace always happen here. They run a single movie all-day and late into the night, many times premiering movies at midnight of opening day. The theater sits on the original site of Ziegfeld Follies on 54th Street between 6th and 7th Aves. It seats over 1000, has elegant décor, impeccable projection quality and surround sound. The next big movie, now that the Lord of the Rings trilogy is over, will probably be Star Wars: Episode III, Revenge of the Sith. You might wait for that one to check it out. Openings at the Ziegfeld always attract the superfans dressed as their favorite characters. Expect long lines, but an enjoyable freak show while you wait.

There are many movie spots to explore in Manhattan. These are just an introduction.

Others you might want to visit are Film Forum, Quad Cinema, Cinema Classics, Landmark Sunshine Cinema, Two Boots Pioneer Theater, and of course for that movie experience to totally immerse you – The Sony IMAX 3-D theater. Let's go out and find the great movies before the rest of the world does. Check the Village Voice, Time Out New York, 777-FILM, or the Internet for movie listings from your chosen destination.

DAN'S TRAVELS

Across The Big Puddle On A Magic Carpet Ride

Two girls embarked on an adventure of a lifetime, across the Big Puddle called the Atlantic Ocean, on a magic carpet ride. Family and friends warned them that the place wasn't safe for Americans, not to mention two young female Americans, to be exploring. But the winds of North Africa called out to the girls, hypnotizing them the way that snake charmers mesmerize their pet serpents in the Djemaa El Fna, the market square in Marrakesh. And so they took off on a 12-day trek to see, taste, hear, smell and feel the essence of life in Morocco – backpacker style.

Each was armed with a guidebook, plane ticket, and journal and even more importantly, a head on her shoulders, an open mind and visions of the magnificent Sahara in her heart. There were no hotel reservations or car rentals, just simply a rough sketch of the cities they wanted to visit and places they wanted to see.

Flying into Casablanca on a red-eye flight, the girls arrived in the city somewhat groggy and a bit overwhelmed. In a matter of only six hours, they had been transported from one of the metropolitan hubs of the world, New York City, where they grew up, to a place where life as they knew it was unheard of. People no longer spoke English, but instead communicated in Arabic or French, or even a mix of the two. Dollars could get them nowhere but to the bureau de change, only to be exchanged for dirhams. And finding a place to lay their heads down for a few hours of rest was finally accomplished only after a 30-dirham cabbie ride, which should've been six, only they didn't know any better. But in retrospect, the 30 dirhams wasn't a bad price to pay for door-to-door service when exhausted and disoriented, not to mention that it was the equivalent of about three American dollars.

Having experienced what was to be the low point of their trip, the girls napped and woke up bright-eyed and ready to step forward into Moroccan culture. And there was a definite element of culture shock felt by both of them for the first couple of days. In addition to stuttering their way back into francais, they also found people interacted differently than back home which, even though it was to be expected, took some getting used to. The food was completely different, consisting of delicious salads and couscous, kebabs and tagines (steam-cooked stews in clay dishes with lids cooked over a charcoal fire). And although there was a McDonald's in every city, they could proudly say they didn't have to resort to entering, as they found the native food to be rather tasty.

The girls also learned that the women's sphere in society was heavily focused on hospitality and their career was child-rearing, while the men's role was to work, bring home the bread, and socialize while sipping mint tea at "café de the's" (tea cafes) through all hours of the day. Not often did they see a woman out with a group of other women socializing, or without a man in their company, except scurrying in the medinas or marketplaces, picking up essentials for the home. About half wore headscarves, although more of the younger ones dressed similarly to semi-conservative twenty-somethings in New York.

And even though Moroccans often found it surprising that these two were interested in exploring their culture and lifestyles, they were very friendly and oftentimes extended themselves to help breach the culture gap by stuttering in broken English to help to get the point across. Morocco truly welcomed them with open arms.

And so the ladies flew through Maroc, as the locals call it, by the seat of their pants. They ventured from Casablanca, which is nothing like the movie, to the beautiful and cosmopolitan capital city of Rabat, and onto Meknes, a smaller-scale metropolis with almost a provincial feel. They wandered through ancient Roman ruins of Volubilis, dating back to the times of 200 AD, and hopped a train to Fez, where they explored its huge medina (one that couldn't be fully comprehended by the biggest shopaholic in the Tri-State area), and stayed in the Riad Dar Masmoudi, a bed and breakfast sure to make a pauper feel like a royal princess, for less than a cheap motel back home.

The two girls hand-fed dates to the Barbary apes swinging among the cedar treetops of the Middle Atlas Mountains and marveled at the magnificent High Atlas Mountains, mouths gaping, as they drove through the wondrous landscapes encompassed within the borders of the country. They also visited Ouarzazate, the Moroccan city most often seen on the big-screen, and swam in the pools of the Cascades d'Ozoud, waterfalls naturally created by springs nearby.

But the Sahara was the place that tickled all of their senses – simultaneously. It was what they came to see and, even with their high expectations, it completely blew them away. Sleeping on the roof of a Berbere hostel in Merzouga, with the indigenous peoples of the desert, under the blackest canvas of stars ever to be seen, the girls were completely floored. Riding camels over the dunes just before sunrise, they ascended to a peak where they watched the world come alive. The sunlight crept along the fine grains for miles, lighting up the sky with brilliant hues, and slowly turned the cool dunes below their feet into warm orange-blazing rolling hills. They sat and sat. Absolutely speechless.

And so, sad to leave their 12-day Moroccan adventure, the girls departed, hoping to get back there some day. But if life gets too hectic, they will always have their magic carpet ride through Maroc, camel and all.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Thanksgiving is only three weeks away and it doesn't give us much time to get ready for the holiday season. The stores are starting to fill with Christmas decorations and holiday gifts. I have already started my holiday shopping, how about you? Oh, and what about getting the house ready for holiday guests? I haven't done that yet!

At Phyllis Decorations on Main Street in Westhampton Beach, you will find that there is a "closing sale" and everything must go. They have fine furniture, accessories and gifts for the home at drastically reduced prices. Open Friday through Monday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Get going while the flavor lasts.

If you're looking for a special "low carb" gift basket or gourmet gift baskets filled with The Old Quogue Farm Florist & Greenhouse's special merchandise, look no further than Old Depot Road and Montauk Highway in Quogue. The farm has plenty of fruits, veggies, flowers, gifts, candles, home and body spa products, plush stuffed animals, gifts, cards, plants and much more. For a little something for your "honey do," the orchids are on sale for two for $30.

Sunrise To Sunset is having 15% off all ladies', men's, girls' and boys' fall clothing.

Located at 36 Hill Street, there is lots of great merchandise to choose from.

On Windmill Lane in Southampton, look for needful things and needlepoint at What's Your Point? This is the perfect time of the year to make someone special, something special for the holiday season, "like they did in the old days" as my kids would say. Give a call at 631-204-2818 for information on how to "stitch, bitch and wine" (quote and unquote), every Tuesday from 5:50 to 7:30 p.m. for their winter schedule on needlepoint. Sounds like fun to me!

If you're really serious about fitness, you must stop in at Gym Source's "Fall 2004 Fitness Sale" and save from 15% to 50% off on fitness equipment. There are also good deals on floor models and demos from 20% to 60% off for their fall sale. Located in Southampton; give them a call at 631-287-1223 for more information.

Check out Charos on Cameron Street in Southampton for their "Clearance Sale." Now is the time to start your holiday shopping...DVD players, TVs, stereos and the like are in the mix.

Windows & Walls on County Road 39, Southampton is having their 'fall sale' on the Hunter Douglas Gallery. Hmmm, did I need new window treatments?

A must stop shop is EGP Collections on Montauk Highway in Water Mill. Until November 14th, you will catch their "annual storewide sale" with from 20% off all new orders and 20% to 50% off all in stock merchandise on contemporary interiors.

Bridgehampton's Déjà Vu Antiques & Collectibles on Main Street has merchandise from the kitchen to the boudoir to the game room. This is a fun store with lots of great stuff and is open five days a week, closed Sunday and Monday.

In Montauk at one of the nicest home furnishings, deco-ratives and French antique stores called At Home En Provence located on Tuthill Road, there is an "End of Season Sale" going on right now! Ask Christine about the "Bathing Beauties Collection", but don't tell her I told you about it. You will be surprised! Give a call at 631-668-4808 for directions.

Oh, oh, I almost forgot about daylight savings time. No wonder I'm getting home at almost dark...Well, just in time to chart my shopping course for next week.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Fall Shopping!

AN EAST END KID: A BOO-TIFUL PARTY

BY EMILY HART POST
WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM KATLEAN DE MONCHY AND
DAVID POST

Wow I'm getting old! This was my second Halloween party at Doubles – and this one was a howl. It was called Ghosties and Goodies. We didn't have to go trick or treating because the treats were everywhere and my old buddy Magic Al took care of the tricks so us kids could just hang out and be entertained. Kids were there with parents, grandparents, godparents, aunts, uncles, but probably no significant others. We all got goody bags to continue the party at home. Goody!

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

KATHRYN SZOKA AT CANIO'S BOOKS

Fine art photographer Kathryn Szoka creates images that won't go away. At least in a viewer's mind and imagination.

However, "creates" is perhaps not an appropriate word – documents may be a better expression. Obviously, "document" (as in documentaries) is also a tricky term, considering the ambiguous nature of non-fiction films featured in last week's Art Commentary.

Ambiguity also plays a part in Ms. Szoka's exhibit at Canio's Books. While admittedly Ms. Szoka's images record the East End landscape, we cannot say with certainty that they depict real life. Like documentaries, still images construct reality, but don't mirror it.

In Ms. Szoka's case, however, such images construct reality by deconstructing it. In other words, she focuses on individual forms (parts) that make up the whole. While her landscapes are stunning on every level, from their compositions to their lighting effects, we see separate shapes first before we experience the entire visual field. At least this critic does.

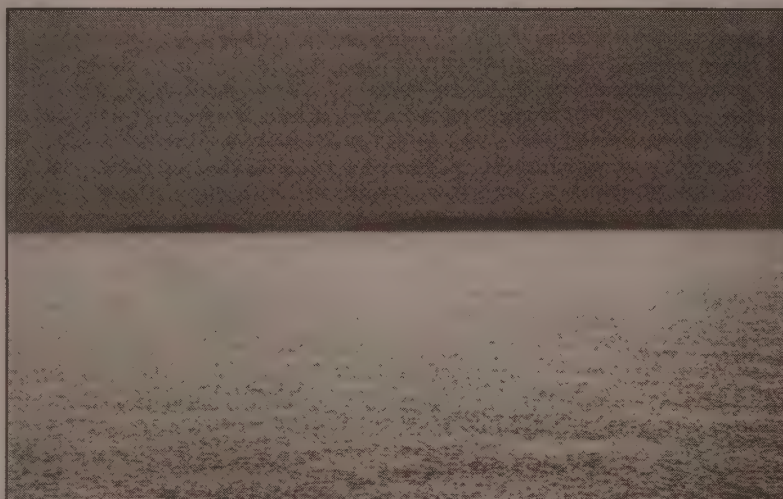

Perceiving the work in this manner may be Ms. Szoka's point. There's no doubt that the land's pristine character is fading as more and more open fields go the way of development. Such an idea is not a new one, especially for artists who interrupt the landscapes' harmony, configurations that fragment the vistas' horizontal flow, for example, a produce stand in "Quail Hill Under Blue Skies" and a warehouse in "Ice Field."

A small building appears again in "Eight Horses in a Field." Despite the vast expanse created by the setting itself, the viewer can't help but notice these block-like shapes first. While such images are not trucks or tractors, and even seem to reinforce the landscapes' character, they upset the balance, nonetheless.

"Shimmering Sea" is one of a series that also comments on the East End's disconcerting nature. While there is no physical structure fragmenting the setting, the thin strip of horizon plays a similar part. Not only is it disappearing into oblivion (perhaps a metaphor for Ms. Szoka's vanishing landscapes) but it's also a reminder of an obstruction that fractures the horizon-juxtapose nature with technology.

"Shimmering Sea," By Kathryn Szoka

Yet Ms. Szoka's vision of such a phenomenon is unique. There are no trucks and machinery in her photographs. There are, instead, structures that tal plane.

"Storm and Fury: the Vanishing Landscapes" will be on view at Sag Harbor's Canio's Books until Nov. 9.

HONORING THE ARTIST: JANE WILSON

While there are no easy ways to describe either Jane Wilson or her art, the word "enigma" comes to mind. So, exactly what is puzzling about this extraordinary artist?

Simply put, it may be the fact that Ms. Wilson has remained a purist all her life. Yet she has done some remarkable works that might also classify her as a Postmodernist, a combination of both traditional and contemporary approaches to form a hybrid style. For example, some would say that both Abstract Expressionism and Neo-Expressionism play a part in her work when we consider Ms. Wilson's current skyscapes.

We'd also swear Ms. Wilson's paintings were products of a Postmodern method combining art and craft: digital technology. No one could possibly capture those skies without augmentation, right? Wrong. Remember, Ms. Wilson is a purist.

Even so, there's another connotation of Postmodernism that strikes this critic about Ms. Wilson's work, particularly those in her current exhibit at New York's D C Moore Gallery: the evocation of other art forms; the symbiosis of painting with dance, music and narrative.

First, there's the matter of movement, an aesthetic quality which distinguishes Ms. Wilson's work. We are reminded of a dancer's leap across the stage, transformed here to motion across a canvas, dynamic swirls often moving from left to right, gathering momentum and power along the way.

Music is another form suggested by Ms. Wilson's art. Themes and variations are pervasive in such works that celebrate the changing climate like "Rain: Heavy at Times" and "Retreating Storm." Seasons are also subjects for variations, including "Green Sky in Autumn" and "Moon in March."

Yet the climate variations, in particular, have nuances that go beyond the normal recording and interpretation of weather. Consider, for example, "Hurricane Rising" and "Nasty Weather." Obviously, words mean a lot to Ms. Wilson, judging from her titles.

Which brings us to the narrative quality of Ms.

Wilson's work. Not only do her titles evoke expressive tone poems, but such descriptions, along with their images, suggest a movie plot. There's a progressive, chronological flow in many of Ms. Wilson's paintings, although the pieces were probably created out of sequence. For example, what plot and ambience these images imply, especially appropriate for last week's Halloween: "Clouded Midnight," "Hurricane Rising," "Nasty Weather," "Receding Night."

We realize that we risk sounding irreverent when describing Ms. Wilson's latter pieces like this. But we also realize that she understands our point.

Ms. Wilson's paintings touch our lives in many important ways.

THEATER

The college/community theater troupe Southampton Players is departing from its fall musical theater tradition to perform an early, gritty Tennessee Williams play, Not About Nightingales. Based on a true incident, the story concerns a group of mostly petty criminals incarcerated in 1938 Pennsylvania, who live in unbearable conditions. Director Michael Disher says, "Each character possesses a specific life story and a degree of humanity and resilience in the face of incomprehensible circumstances."

Due to its subject matter, nudity and violence, Not About Nightingales is recommended for mature audiences only. Performances are this Saturday at 8 p.m., Sunday at 5 p.m., and the next two weekends, Friday through Sunday, at the Avram Theater, Fine Arts building, Southampton College. Tickets are $15 adults, $10 senior/students at the door.

Pianists Katherine Addleman and Alvin Novak will play "Little-Known Masterpieces for Four-Hand Piano" by Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Debussy and Milhaud on Sunday, 3 p.m. at the Rogers Memorial Library, Southampton. There is no admission charge for this program, but reservations are requested; call 283-0774 ext. 523.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

review: brooklyn, the musical...by gordin & christiano

Unfortunately, Brooklyn, the Musical with book, music and lyrics by Mark Shoenfeld and Barri McPherson is not compelling musical theatre. That it has made it to a Broadway stage is a bit of a miracle itself, but then, the program lists 23 producers, most with questionable credentials. The story that unfolds at the Plymouth Theatre is a naive, sentimental, cliché-ridden hybrid, which seems to borrow from several successful musical sources of which the hit Broadway show Rent and television's "American Idol" are the most obvious.

One wants to be kind as the show's creators had the best intentions, but the sad truth is that what you have is an unsophisticated soap opera boasting 18 songs with sappy lyrics. Naive is the best way to describe it. The intent was to charm us and to lift our spirits, but unlike Rent, which had heart and real characters, Brooklyn, the Musical, gives you neither. Instead there is banal dialogue like: "The truth is but a flame that engulfs the butterfly;" "I believe in miracles;" and this gem, "Sometimes with our tears we can water roses." Get the idea?

The urban fairy tale about a young girl named Brooklyn (Eden Espinosa), in search of the father that abandoned her when she was just a baby, is told by a group of homeless street entertainers living under the Brooklyn Bridge. They play all the roles and are referred to as "The weeds that sprout through the pavement." Like The Fantasticks, the musical is a story within a story. Brooklyn's father, Taylor (Kevin Anderson), left her Parisian mother, Faith (Karen Olivo), shortly after Brooklyn was born, leaving an unfinished

lullaby and promising to return. Faith, a dancer with a broken heart, hangs herself during a performance one evening and Brooklyn has only the unfinished lullaby her father had sung for her. Taken in by nuns, Brooklyn becomes a famous singer in France, the storyteller confides to us. "Famous for a song, a song that finds the lost child in all of us."

Scheduled to play New York's Carnegie Hall, she dreams of going to Brooklyn to find her father. Once there, her good natured spirit antagonizes a sassy fading diva named Paradise (Ramona Keller), who was born with "nothing but a pair of dice round my neck." We learn she "still bleeds beneath this suit of armor" and she also misses her father. Street-wise Paradise challenges Brooklyn to a winner-take-all "American Idol"-like vocal duel of the divas at Madison Square Garden. Who puts up the money? Don't ask. In fact, don't think; just go with the flow, and believe in happy endings. If this appeals to you, stay with me, for, lo and behold, Brooklyn finds her father, now a heroin-addicted Vietnam vet. Brooklyn encourages him to finish the lullaby. She plans to win the contest by singing the song with him. Paradise tempts Taylor with drugs, so when show time rolls around he is nowhere to be found. Paradise wins the contest, but something better is in store for Brooklyn...a happy ending.

The show's tuneful music has a melodious pop/soul/rock sound and director Jeff Calhoun has done an admirable job of infusing the evening with an abundance of energy. Ramona Keller, who was part of the radio trio in Caroline or Change, possesses a soulful voice and a brazen attitude that make her a standout. She delivers her two songs, "Superlover" and "Raven," with a winning, mischievous style. Cleavant Derricks, who won a Tony for Dreamgirls, although immensely likeable, has little to do. Kevin Anderson is an excellent performer, but is saddled with the challenging father role. He is forced to sing "Love Was a Song" while shooting up heroin. Eden Espinosa, making her Broadway debut as Brooklyn, is a bit of a disappointment. She displays the vocal gymnastics popularized by Mariah Carey and the staple of "American Idol," but her voice became squeaky and broke in the higher registers.

The musical is performed in an hour and forty-five minutes without an intermission. When all is said and done, the zany costumes designed by Tobin Orst are the most memorable aspects of the evening.

Brooklyn, the Musical opened at the Plymouth Theatre, 236 West 45th Street, on October 21, 2004. Tickets are available online at Telecharge.com/Brooklyn or by phone at 212-6200.

THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE

Be prepared for an explosive blast of entertainment spiked with comedy, warmth and local East End charm. Brace yourself for Dan's Papers' They Made The Movie Here selection of the recent, highly acclaimed Something's Gotta Give, starting at 2 p.m. on Saturday, November 6th at the Ross School's Lecture Hall, 9 Goodfriend Drive off Route 114. Come see who'll give in in this battle of the sexes. If you know, don't tell. I am your host, Guy de Fraumeni and, as such, I'll attempt to guide you through the minefields in this dynamite show along with Sarah Halsey and solid refreshments. This is quality stuff and, it's FREE.

Giving the biggest bang for the buck is Diane Keaton's terrific performance as a dating-shy divorcée, unexpectedly the object of the affections of an aging playboy played by (as only he can play) Jack Nicholson. Their chemistry was bound to be explosive but, it was Keaton's TNT compound-fracturing delight that's moved mountains, rewarding her with an Academy Award nomination, Golden Globe and National Board of Review Awards.

If having Ms. Keaton and Jack in top form is something, how about the two of 'em in the fabulous Hamptons? That's something. That's about more glamour than a guy can take. I should know, it was shot not far from my place – I assure you, there's no rear projection on a Hollywood sound stage. The sound stage sets used are also Hamptons property – Frazier Dougherty's Pinewood West Studios. Our beaches and rural lanes have never looked nicer, nor has Miss Diane, thanks to cinematographer Michael Balhaus. Something's script was written by its producer and director, Nancy Meyers, who stuffs the story with enough comfortable, squishy kapok, that we all know and have loved before. However, Something gives a lot more bounce to the plump coziness (I am not referring to Nicholson's bared bare behind).

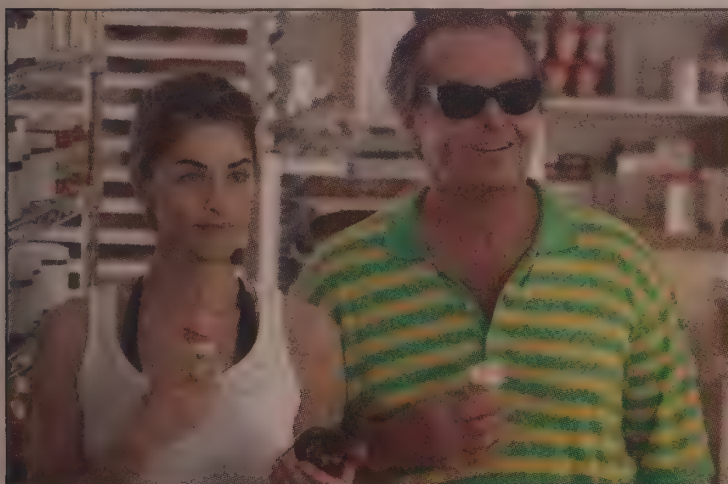

Talents like Frances MacDormand as Keaton's sharp-tongued sister and Amanda Peet as her daughter give the women the upper hand in kneading a plot that starts with Jack coming out to the Hamptons to spend a weekend romancing the much younger Amanda in her mother's beach house. Further complications arise with Jack's heart attacking him. The attending doctor, Keanu Reeves, assures Amanda, "Your dad's going to be okay." Not funny to Jack, who suddenly feels his heart going out to an "older woman" of all things. But, being weak, you might say weak of heart – he stalls. In jumps Keanu, who doesn't see Diane as an "older woman." I let you take it from there.

What do you give a woman who has everything? More!

More is what you get from Dan's Papers' Film Festivals. Bingo!

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

So, sue me. Go ahead and sue me! So, I don't give you any clear-cut grades for films like alphabetical letters, or symbols such as stars or asterisks, no numerical scales with pluses or minuses, and certainly no hand digits. Why? 'Cause even if I hate a movie, the folks who work so hard making a film deserve more than being given the finger. Take the premature holiday flick Surviving Christmas and please take it away on a stretcher, but not to a hospital. It just shouldn't be out anywhere near December 25th of any year, even though it is a classic – a classic mess. Can't you see the movie's advertising department picking up the quote "...it is a classic." Of course, I could give it the finger and let it go at that; however, I don't want to appear all thumbs.

Surviving Christmas (actually, it puts Christmas in jeopardy) was unleashed by DreamWorks Pictures, who also gave us Shark Tale, which capitalizes on Mafia Italian – American stereotypes as fun for kids. Now, Surviving stars "Sopranos" icon James Gandolfini as the head of a weary suburb-dreary Italo-USA family. Especially, Shark Tales numbness to sensitivity, we wonder if DreamWorks' executive Steven Spielberg has been minding the store. This is not to say that he should be personally ashamed of the "Christmas" flick, but it wouldn't hurt, and that also goes for Ben Affleck, the star of Surviving Christmas. Is he on a suicide mission? An actor he's not, but can't he read a script before accepting a role? Does he think his toothy grin alone can keep his celebrity status aroused? And, Mr. Gandolfini – is he cannoli stoned? He can act. You call this a movie for a performer of his size? Is it because he can fill a Wal-Mart Santa suit? All of these questions go for a big one – are producers, actors, and even gaffers supposed to have a conscience?

I rarely name names for bad work to protect the guilty. In this case, I gladly condemn the following screenwriters, all four (count 'em) Deborah Kaplan, Harry Elfont, Jeffrey Ventimilca and Joshua Sternin for the following yuletide swagger. Ben is millionaire advertising guy who is broke as far as his understanding human nature and love. He's a workaholic, media-brilliant individual whose latest brainstorm will have real alcohol in holiday eggnog. Another not so great idea was his Christmas present to his girlfriend: a proposition instead of a proposal.

Without a lover, friend or relative for the holiday, he cabs to the modest home he grew up in in the suburbs of Chicago. There, presiding over the Valco family table in deteriorating disarray is Papa Gandolfini, sporting a black, Italian Santa beard so as not to be confused as a bearer of gifts. Ben, trying to buy love and family, attempts to lift the Valcos and daughter, Christina Applegate, out of their smudgy, blue collar clumpiness, only to encumber them further with his lover's return with her glitzy family. Hilarious, ain't it? It ain't.

If it isn't good for laffs, was there money in it? There had to be a buck or two in it. Are we owed any guarantee to get our money's worth at the box office? Does anyone care? Do you want a rating? An R? A PG-13? An A, a B? Three stars? Two fingers of rum in the eggnog might help ease the pain. One finger might express your feelings.

And, to all a good night.

Dining in the Hamptons

It was a perfect crisp fall night when I pulled into Almond's parking lot in Bridgehampton. The trees were dressed with tiny white lights adding an extra touch to this farmhouse-style restaurant. Upon my arrival, Almond's manager, Laura, greeted me. I decided to wait at the sprawling mahogany bar for my guest to arrive. Co-owner Eric Lemonides circulated through the room and greeted me at the bar moments later. His charming personality and natural charisma were most welcoming.

The first thing I noticed was the flickering of candles that dotted the room and bar, while the vintage mirrors and dark wood moldings added to the French bistro ambiance. While sipping on a glass of buttery Chardonnay, I chatted with Gabriel, who was having dinner at the bar as many customers do. Almond is definitely a great place to meet people or gather with friends for a few cocktails.

Shortly after, Catherine arrived and we were escorted to our cozy table. We were both excited to enjoy a relaxing meal and began to peruse the menu. Our lovely waitress, Missy, filled our water glasses from an elegant vintage bottle and told us about the evenings specials while a basket of warm crisp bread and creamy butter arrived at table.

Catherine and I have the same tastes, so it was easy to decide on what to order. For starters, we shared a Lardon Salad with frisee, topped with a poached egg and mixed with crisp bacon tossed in light vinaigrette dressing. The combination of the warm egg and crunchy greens was the perfect match combining two completely different textures. Every morsel was a refreshing burst of flavor.

Moments after we finished our salad, our appetizers were delivered with perfect timing. We had decided to share an order of Duck Confit and a half portion of Braised Short Ribs. The Duck Confit, perfectly crispy on the outside and sweet and tender on the inside, was accompanied by hearty and healthy baby French lentils. What can I say about the short ribs? The meat melted on our tongues. The tangy flavorful rich sauce prepared with red wine and beets is a divine combination. Almond also offers Escargot with garlic and Pernod and Mussels steamed in a white wine, parsley and shallot sauce.

After our appetizers were finished, we were already in a state of euphoria. The portion and presentation of every dish is carefully created and prepared by Executive Chef and co-owner Jason Weiner. Jason and Eric take pride in every facet of their restaurant. From the décor to the menu selections, every detail is fine-tuned and it does not go unnoticed.

Catherine and I continued our easy conversation, as did every table in the house. This French bistro is perfectly designed so that each table provides a cozy little nook for people to enjoy each other's company and the open space allows for intimate chat. The laughter, melded with soft music, filled the air, creating a very European vibe.

A few minutes later our meals arrived and our eyes grew in size. I think we were both thinking that we wouldn't be able to finish this beautiful display of food, but that didn't stop us. I started with one of Almond's popular dishes, Lamb Shank. The meat practically fell off the bone and was paired with fresh white bean ragout and braised greens. Catherine ordered Atlantic Flounder served in a casserole dish and cooked in a clam chowder sauce. The flounder was fresh and moist with a zesty tasting sauce served with rouille and smoked bacon. A few other stand out dishes include Grilled Salmon prepared with butternut squash and shrimp-curry jus or sautéed greens, Pork Shank cooked with a tamarid glaze and served with carrot puree and a Marinated Hanger Steak. Almond in addition has an assortment of side dishes such as Curried Winter Squash or Roast Garlic Crushed Potatoes.

Enjoying a night out is all about savoring every bite and Almond timed every course just right. It was hard to believe that we still had room for dessert, but we couldn't resist. A creamy sweet Crème Brulee and Chocolate Pot de Crème topped with almonds and Crème Fraiche was heavenly. If you ever get nostalgic for French cuisine in a charming bistro setting, may I recommend Almond in Bridgehampton. Bon appetit!

Almond offers nightly specials in addition to a three-course Prix Fixe menu available every night until 7 p.m. and all night on Mondays. Appetizers range from $8 and up; and entrées start at $18. Closed on Wednesdays.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The invitation from The Italian Trade Commission and the Regional Government of Veneto read, "The Wines and Foods from the Veneto, Thursday October 28th, Tavern on the Green - New York City." How could I resist? Happily, it was a crisp and sunny fall day and perfect for travel into the city.

The afternoon began with a wine and cheese tasting for the press in the Crystal Room, where the sun reflected through the dazzling glass walls so brightly that the young man next to me said he was working on a tan. What we were working on was a tasting session of some remarkable white and red Venetian wines. They included a Bianco di Custoza, a refreshing palate cleanser with trebbianello, garganega, cortese, chardonnay and riesling grapes, a rich velvety textured Lison Pramaggiore with 100% refosco dal peduncolo rosso grape, and a spicy robust Bardolino with corvina, rondinella and sangiovese grape varieties. Service was efficient as several delectable cheese plates were served along with baskets of crisp breads to cleanse our palates.

Following the seminar, we were ushered into the grand Terrace Room with its hand carved plaster ceiling, where I enjoyed a spectacular lunch and was delighted to learn that the menu and recipes were supervised by my colleague Giuliano Bugialli, award-winning Italian cookbook author. We began with a truly delicious Risi e Bisi, a creamy risotto with peas. Our second course, bigoli (long pasta) cooked in duck broth was followed by veal scaloppine topped with a piquant sauce of pignoli nuts and raisins. Delizioso! A plate of Venetian cheeses with fresh fruit - Asiago Pressato, Monteveronese, Montasio. Piave and Grana Padano were pleasing indeed. Crema frita, a fried dessert, so extraordinarily good that my table mate, a gentleman from Birmingham, Michigan and proprietor of a full scale gourmet market, hopes to duplicate the dish at home.

I was taken by the following passage, which is reprinted from a booklet on wines from the Veneto region. Marc de Grazia, an American wine importer living in Florence, puts it like this: "Venetian culture has a sunny quality and a playfulness you don't find in Tuscany or Piedmont. The Veneto was the only place in the world that was successful in controlling the Baroque. Listen to Vivaldi. He was Venetian. His music has a happiness and simplicity you don't find in Bach or Handel. Look at the art. Paolo Veronese's pictures are full of gorgeous blue skies. You taste it in the food and wine." It summed up the high I was on for the day - and it wasn't just from the wine.

Giuliano Bugialli's PICCATINE IN CAPONE

Cold Veal Scaloppine in Piquant Sauce
Serves 6

- 2 extra large eggs
- 6 veal scaloppine about 1/2 pounds, pounded
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper
- About 2 cups unseasoned bread crumbs, preferably homemade
- 8 tablespoons unsalted butter
- About 10 sprigs Italian parsley leaves only, finely chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
- 2 tablespoons pignoli (pine nuts)
- 2 tablespoons raisins
- 1 medium-sized red onion, finely chopped
- 1/4 cup olive oil
- About 6 whole black peppercorns
- 1 bay leaf
- 2 cups red wine vinegar
- 2 cups cold water

1. Beat eggs with a fork in a mixing bowl. Add salt to taste and a little pepper and place the cutlets in the bowl, tossing to mix very well. Marinate for at least 1 hour, mixing occasionally.

2. Place a sheet of aluminum foil on a board and spread the bread crumbs out on the foil. Remove one cutlet at a time from the egg and bread it on both sides. Press the scaloppine all over with the palm of your hand to make sure that both sides are coated uniformly.

3. Melt the butter in a large skillet over medium heat. When butter is completely melted, add the cutlets and sauté for 2 minutes on each side (you may have to do this in batches). Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Transfer the cooked meat to a serving dish. (Do not pat with paper towel.) Arrange the cutlets in a row overlapping them slightly. Sprinkle the chopped ingredients over the cutlets along with the pignoli and raisins.

4. Heat the oil in a small saucepan over medium heat. When the oil is hot, add the chopped onion. Sauté lightly for about 10 minutes, or until the onion is translucent. Add the whole black peppercorns, bay leaf, wine vinegar, and water to the pan. Let the vinegar evaporate very slowly (for about 15 minutes). During this time the liquid should be reduced by half. Remove the pan from the heat and discard the bay leaf. Pour the sauce over the veal on the serving dish. Let the sauce cool for about 30 minutes, then wrap the dish with aluminum foil and refrigerate for at least 3 hours before serving.

Dan's Papers... "No. 1 Choice for Bagels"
"Simply the best bagels in the Hamptons since 1985."

Silvia (continued from page 50)

1/3 cup finely chopped flat leaf parsley
 3 tablespoons unsalted butter
 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
 4 ounces pancetta, chopped fine
 Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
 10-ounce package frozen baby peas, defrosted
 6 cups chicken or beef broth, preferably home-made

Plus

2 cups Italian Arborio style rice
 3 tablespoons unsalted butter
 3 heaping tablespoons freshly grated Parmigiano

1. Chop the celery into small pieces, and then chop the parsley and reserve.

2. Heat the butter and oil in a saucepan, such as a 3-quart enamel over iron casserole, and when the butter is completely melted add the pancetta and sauté for 5 minutes, stirring to crisp the pieces. Add the celery and parsley and sauté for 4-5 minutes longer. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

3. Meanwhile simmer the broth in a saucepan on a burner adjacent to the pan to cook the rice. Add the rice all at once to the vegetables, toss to coat with the vegetables and simmer over medium-low heat. Start adding the broth, about 1/2 cup at a time carefully stirring until the liquid is almost absorbed. Continue adding broth, a little at a time until the broth is absorbed into the rice with each addition. About halfway through cooking, stir in the peas and continue adding broth until rice is creamy yet tender and firm to the bite, about 23-25 minutes. Remove from heat, stir in the butter and cheese, and serve at once.

Smiles That Will Change Your Life

At Smile Solutions, Dr. Guy Spinner creates smiles that can change lives. Now a movie star smile is as close as your mirror. Starting with healthy teeth and gums, Dr. Spinner can perfect your smile through porcelain restorations, veneers, whitening, and other state-of-the-art treatments. As seen on TV, Dr. Spinner can make over your smile. He provides the highest quality cosmetic and reconstructive dentistry in a safe, comfortable environment for those who desire the best. Recently named the best dentist in Dan's Papers "Best of the Best," Dr. Spinner keeps himself current in all the latest advancements by continuing postgraduate training at the world-renowned Las Vegas Institute.

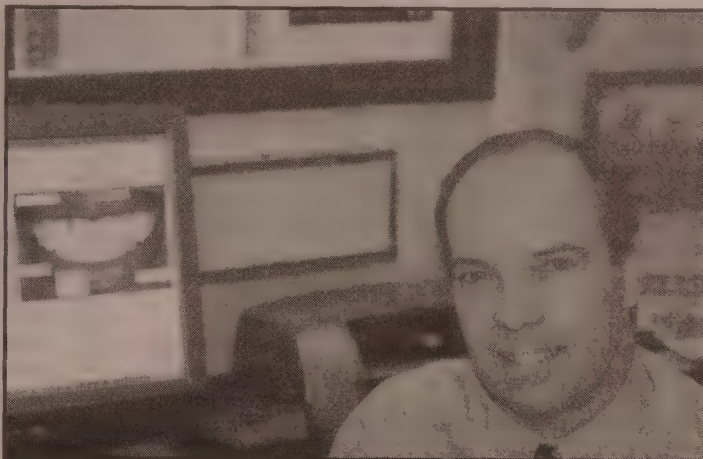

Dr. Spinner's practice is unique because he practices neuromuscular dentistry. The developments in the field of Neuromuscular Dentistry and the use of a K-7 Muscle and Jaw tracking computer provide the capability to "get your bite right." Neuromuscular dentistry places the jaw in perfect position, relieving the symptoms of head pain, jaw pain, grinding, teeth fracturing, jaw popping and clicking. The "bite" must be balanced prior to completing extensive dental work. His advanced training and utilization of high technology gives Dr. Spinner the ability to create a beautiful smile and perhaps eliminate headaches, pain behind the eyes, neck and jaw pain. In addition to an outstanding smile, patients physically feel better.

The in-house teeth whitening procedure (laser bleaching) offered at Smile Solutions is the quickest and easiest method to improve your physical appearance. Teeth staining caused by coffee, tea, red wine and cigarettes detracts from your smile. Medications also contribute to discoloration of teeth. Teeth whitening add brightness to your smile and you appear years younger. Even people with past sensitivity to bleaching agents are comfortable after this procedure. A sparkling smile results instantly.

If one or more teeth are missing, you'll want to talk with Dr. Spinner about replacements that are as natural as possible. If dentures don't work for you, you may consider dental implants. Unlike dentures, which can be removed, Dr. Spinner can make dental implants that are permanently anchored into the jaw itself. With dental implants at Smile Solutions, you get a perfect fit, and they will look and feel as good as your original teeth. You will be able to enjoy a more diversified, nutritious diet.

Dr. Spinner uses ultra-thin porcelain veneers to correct chipped, weakened, or discolored teeth, eliminating gaps or embarrassing flaws. Veneers return real structural integrity to damaged teeth, leaving them looking remarkably natural. At Smile Solutions, your veneers are custom made to fit over your natural teeth, with a translucent finish to blend in with surrounding teeth. People won't notice your teeth; they'll simply see your beautiful, natural smile.

Dr. Spinner

The Smile Solutions team consistently displays care and concern for clients.. Committed to pursuing excellence; they strive for perfection. Dr. Spinner prides himself on his ability to make each guest feel comfortable and relaxed. In his office, you view authentic client smile makeover pictures and read remarkable testimonies written by actual patients. You'll be amazed at what he can do!

Smile Solutions' high tech equipment and services include: computers in each treatment area with cosmetic imaging capabilities (to preview your makeover results), digital x-rays (to minimize radiation exposure), metal and mercury free fillings, lasers, muscle and jaw scanning K-7 computers and full mouth rejuvenation as seen on makeover TV shows.

Dr. Spinner, a graduate of Hofstra University and The State University of New York at Buffalo Dental School, was the sole recipient of The Academy of General Dentistry Award. He recently graduated from The Las Vegas Institute for Advanced Dental Studies and is listed on the web at leadingdentists.com.

His professional memberships include: The American Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry, The New York State Dental Association, The Suffolk County Dental Association, Southampton Hospital Dental Staff (past president).

Dr. Spinner believes aesthetic dentistry is a consolidation of all dentistry. Beauty combined with perfect function promotes perfect health. One of the first things people notice is your smile. If chipped, stained, or crooked teeth are "hiding" the real you, it's time for a smile makeover with Guy A Spinner, DDS.

Skin deep with Samantha Altea

A rough winter's spell

During winter and the colder months, when the sky is often gray and gloomy and it's freezing outside, we're all more susceptible to winter time blues. But how does one go from the blues to being in the pink?

In Great Britain, where I grew up – renowned for being cold and gray for a large part of the year, we've got one remedy. You'll find that the most popular soap operas in the UK come from Australia. Some Aussie shows are even aired twice a day. People can't get enough of them. They're like a religion and have been for over 15 years. But when this Australian phenomenon first emerged, nobody could quite understand why the shows became such instant hits. What did the Aussie soaps have that was so appealing? Studies were carried out to discover exactly what their x factor was. The results...sunshine! We were hooked on the brighter side of life, where the sun always shines and the air is always warm and comforting.

Being down and depressed on occasion is natural, it's the law – the order of things; it's a part of growing and living that we all encounter with a resounding sigh, but for the most part, get through and get over. But does the weather have anything to do with our moods? Does the sun make us smile?

Well, there is a disorder called SAD, Seasonal Affective Disorder, which affects about 30% of the population and, while it's not exactly certain what causes it, research does show that sunshine and temperature are major factors. Symptoms of SAD are:

- Low mood that starts in autumn or winter
- Lack of energy and lethargy
- Increased appetite and weight gain (there is often a craving for carbohydrate food)

- Increased sleep and daytime sleepiness

Consider this – if you go to work before the sun rises and come home after it's set, you're not getting a lot of sun therapy and if you do feel like you are greatly incapacitated by the symptoms above, then a visit to your GP may be worth while.

However, we can all feel sluggish, depressed and down during the winter – even when the sun is out. So what's a girl or boy to do?

When the going gets tough, the tough go shopping...or crack open a pint of Ben and Jerry's...perhaps even take a comforting nap...Maybe hit a spa for some pampering.

What do you do when the winter blues begin to set in? Do you have a vice, or little indulgence you turn to? What floats your boat when all is sinking? Many of us self medicate – find our own therapy when we're down in the dumps...

Shopping therapy:

Shopping gives many of us a quick fix, a buzz. We actually feel a chemical high when finding the most perfect pair of shoes, accessory, or gadget and as the cash register accepts your credit card with a whirr, you may experience an overwhelming sense of well-being. Shopping therapy – don't you just love it? But beware, shopping is literally addictive – over 15 million Americans suffer from compulsive shopping disorder. While a quick boost once in a while is perfectly healthy (as far as I'm concerned compulsory), dealing with a shopping addiction and the debts that quickly accrue as a direct effect of it are sure to spiral anyone in to an even deeper depression. So, if shopping's your bag, try something economical, like bath salts, or smelly candles. You can enjoy these types of purchases after the buzz of shopping for them has worn off. Balance your checkbook by the light of a soothing smelly candle and be sure not to bust the budget.

Heat On Your Feet

October is over. It's already getting cold, and if we go by last winter, it's going to get a heck of a lot colder. Soon, or maybe already, the fireplaces are stoked, flannel PJs are out, and heating oil bills are skyrocketing. With all these weapons to aid in our conflict with cold, the bathroom is often still eye-openingly brisk. Think of the midnight shock to your pigs as they fall sockless on icy tile. Or worse, a frigid toilet-seat that desires layers of warm TP – not unlike your favorite gas stations along 495. Nobody wants to crank their heat high enough to solve these problems, and until we invade Canada and take their oil reserves, the cost alone will double your bills.

This very specific problem requires a site-specific solution – bathroom heating. Ideally, your heater should provide an evenly distributed layer of warmth over your body, and should not be so hot that it is uncomfortable to stand near. To accomplish this goal, there are three types of heaters: Wall-mounted fan heaters, wall-mounted radiant heaters, and electric radiant floor heating. Space heaters are obviously a dangerous choice, akin to blow-drying while bathing in a room where water can splash onto the floor and steam the air. Don't even think about it.

Wall-mounted fan heaters are the fastest way to heat up the bathroom, and generally switch-activated. The fan blows warm airflow over you, but if you want consistent warmth it's not the best choice, even if it will create a fabulous wind effect while you're drying off. These heaters make enough noise to drown out your shower-karaoke renditions, of Cheap Trick and Beyonce (arguably a good thing), so leaving them on all night won't work either.

Radiant wall-mounted heaters don't make noise, but are difficult to find. That exciting red light in the ceilings of motel bathrooms is an example of this style of heater. It might be a little too Amsterdam for you. Radiant heat is also mostly switch-activated (you can't leave it on all night) and better for drying off. If drying yourself is what matters, consider the possibility of the heated towel racks that provide towels with that fresh out of the dryer feel every time. Racks are available at www.eqwip.com in several styles such as the paneled or the more basic, stick design. Prices range from $500-1000. It's a luxury item that can make you feel like the pampered lord of the manor, or of the one-bedroom apartment.

The coup de grace of bathroom comfort is electric radiant floor heating. At the price of about 15 cents a day in electricity, floor heating is cost-effective, and its temperature control options allow for flexibility. Even in the dead of winter, lying sick and nauseous on the bathroom floor with that flu you couldn't get a shot for, you can avoid cold tiles. And when you're feeling well, the mat that is buried under a thin layer of cement and ceramic tile will still keep the floor at a welcoming 80-85 degrees. This won't wake you from walking sleep during those nighttime moments of need, and will be ready for you in the morning. For the average bathroom, prices run around $400-1000 with a quick installation in three steps. First you mail your bathroom plans to get an estimate, you order, then they ship and install. It's as easy as it sounds.

Oil is getting so expensive, and with the winters continuing to be brutal out here, heat is more of an issue than ever. Most people turn their thermostats down at night to save money and enjoy the warmth and security of a nice comforter. The bathroom is the one place you may get out of bed for, and really needs a consistent temperature.

Find these systems at www.eqwip.com, www.nuheat.com, and www.dkheating.com to make your bathroom the snug place for reading magazines it yearns to be. If not, there's always that green shag toilet-seat cover with matching bathmat and tissue-box -cozy in the attic.

Nurturing Nibbles:

Many people turn to food for comfort when stressed or depressed, but the types of foods we all tend to grab when the refrigerator light goes on may not be the best solution for our down swing. While high sugar snacks and carbohydrates, like chocolate, ice cream, and chips, give us an instant elated feeling, no sooner have we felt the buzz, than we begin to crash. In the long run, depression has a big appetite and these types of food only feed it. The result – overeating and obesity in order to maintain food intoxication, or a feeling of dissatisfaction post food high, and we're back to square one. However, food can be a great boost and a way to help us out of a slump. Try instead of junk food snacking on fruits, vegetables, or nuts. These will give you energy and a lasting high.

Pet Therapy:

It's proven that stroking a dog or cat can lower your blood pressure. Watching tropical fish is also proven to decrease stress and high blood pressure. Studies show that people who own pets live longer. Even heart attack victims have been studied, and those who have pets post-attack live longer than those who don't.

So when you've shopped till you drop and eaten all you can, know that Felix or Fido will be there for you, even when the chips are down. Get a pet, a best friend – it's the best therapy in the world.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

At Rock Cottage, we are especially interested in plants that are easy to cultivate and that prove reliable and consistent over time. One plant that receives our highest recommendation is a family of orchids known as Oncidium. Commonly known for their spectacular sprays of flowers and brilliant colors, the Oncidium is commonly known as the "dancing ladies" orchid because the blossoms give the illusion of the ruffled skirts of Flamenco dancers.

*Oncidium*s, and closely-related orchids, are part of a genus of about 350 species in the subfamily Vandoideae. All of these plants are in the general orchid family named Orchidaceae. As a name, Oncidium is derived from the Greek word "onkos," meaning "swelling." It refers to the callos at the lower lip of the blossom. This plant was first described in about 1800.

The Oncidium genus has something for everyone, regardless of personal taste or the available growing condition. Most species in this genus are epiphytes (grow high in trees). However, some are lithophytes (orchids that grow in rocky, well-drained soils). The Oncidium orchids originate from the tropical Americas, Caribbean, Bahamas, Hispaniola, and South Florida. The plants themselves can be small or large and produce small to large flowers, with most somewhere in between.

Most Oncidiums bloom once a year, though there are some hybrids that bloom more frequently. We have two plants that have bloomed consistently on a yearly basis for the last 25 years. The plants are ideal for bathrooms that have east- or west-facing windows. Colors can be yellow, pink, red, or white.

The exotic markings and patterns that decorate the flowers are one distinction of this genus of orchid. Some may be fragrant and at least one of the newer hybrids has gained interest from its fragrance alone.

Members of Oncidium are adaptable plants and can be easily grown indoors without much trouble. We believe they are an ideal houseplant. They do extremely well in screened-in patios or greenhouses, provided they have sufficient air circulation. Members of this genus require at least five hours of light daily to thrive and flower reliably. They generally prefer the same room temperatures as people.

Choice of potting material is important, as most of these orchids like to dry out between waterings. Fine-graded potting media is best with fine-rooted species and coarser mixes with larger-rooted plants. Tree-fern fiber and/or wood chips with some charcoal chips mixed in seems to work very well. For those species that are terrestrial, a mixture of leaf mold, peat, and wood chips works well.

Position the plants in terra cotta pots with great drainage (never plastic) so that the newest growth is farthest away from the edge of the pot. Potting this way allows the maximum number of new growth before the pot becomes overcrowded (these plants will grow over the edge of pots). Potting works best when done in Spring as the new growth emerges. Gently spread the roots over a cone of potting medium and fill in around the roots. Firm the medium around the roots. Water well once planted to soak the new medium. Keep humidity high and the potting medium fairly dry until new roots form. Repot the plants every two to three years, as the medium begins to break down and drainage begins to become compromised. Some of the epiphytes can also be grown on slabs of cork bark or tree fern (be sure to fill in around the roots with some wood and charcoal chips to ensure the plants have adequate humidity).

Always let the pots in which oncidium orchids are planted dry out completely between waterings. Most of these orchids cannot tolerate being overly wet. The plants benefit from a light dose of fish emulsion fertilizer once a month during the active growing periods in the spring and summer.

Over the years, we have found some of the most beautiful species to look for include the following (if you can find them): O. aberrans, O. amabile, and O. bifolium (from Brazil), O. brachystachys (from Colombia), O. silvanii (from Peru), O. durangense (from Mexico), O. floridanum (from South Florida and Cuba), O. lancifolium (from Ecuador), O. ornithopodum (from tropical America), O. altissimum (from Jamaica), O. viperinum (from Bolivia and Northwest Argentina), and O. variegatum (from South Florida to the Caribbean).

As you stroll through the nursery and gardening shops on the East End, keep an eye out for a brilliant spray of flowers that seem suspended in the air. If you happen to see these, be sure to grab an example or two for your home. Believe us, you will not regret the purchase!

You can contact Lance Brilliantine with any questions or comments at GardenLance@yahoo.com.

HURRAH FOR WHO'S HERE

Dear Dan,

I just read your Who's Here about Peggy Kerry in the last issue of Dan's and I have to say it is your very best interview yet. It was the most impressive Who's Here since Dan's Papers has been in existence.

Most people have never heard the inside story of the Kerry family and I'm sure that if this issue was circulated all over the country, Kerry would win by a landslide.

Thanks for a great paper.

GIVE JOHN A CHANCE

Dear Dan,

Like most Americans these days, I am wrestling with whom I should vote for in the upcoming presidential election. I have watched the "debates", listened to their speeches, looked at them as leader and potential leader of the free world, read and familiarized myself with their backgrounds and looked at their prior contributions as public servants.

I have come to the conclusion that the choice is not clear-cut, it seldom is, as far as the individual is concerned. They both have their strengths and weaknesses. What is clear-cut is the obvious choice between Democratic and Republican philosophies. With these two men, never has it been more obvious.

I therefore object to the argument that Bush supporter's use. "I know what I got, I don't know what I'm getting". I do not like what "I got". Bush got us into this horrible, bloody stalemate in Iraq under false pretenses which he stubbornly refuses to acknowledge, his cabinet are either divided in their policies or are simply incompetent, his stubborn refusal to negotiate with the North Koreans with or without bilateral support, his seemingly ignorance or self-interest in the Saudi involvement in harboring terrorists, his inability to capture or kill Ben-Laden, inaction in containing the Iranian development of nuclear weapons and the continuing stalemate between the Israelis and Palestinians. Aside from Great Britain, never has the United States been held in such low esteem.

On domestic policies, his ill conceived tax policy at the wrong time and to the wrong taxpayers, the spiraling deficit which eventually will destroy our economy, his opposition to funding stem cell research which holds the promise to curing many of today's diseases, his record on the environment (non-existent), his unfunded educational initiatives and most frightening of all, his possible nomination of three supreme court justices with far right ultra conservative philosophies.

What will John Kerry do? I for one am willing to give him the opportunity to prove that from our present circumstances there's no place to go but up.

Dear Dan,

Thank you very much for the wonderful coverage of the Rita Hayworth Gala in Dan's Papers, as well as the item on the Food Allergy Ball. It looks great as always.

Thanks again.

SAVING SOUTHAMPTON COLLEGE

Dear Dan,

I read the press release from LIU about the "glorious" deal that LIU has put together with Stony Brook to save the Marine Science center. I read it several times and each time I came away with the feeling that Southampton College was part of a scavenger hunt. The "plum possession" of Southampton College has been snatched away on the cheap. A quick deal to save the face of LIU. Lease it for three (3) years to Stony Brook, let all the Marine Science undergraduate and graduate students finish their education's with an academic presence in Southampton but not on the campus...OFF campus proper, down the road.... Ergo no need for a Gym, Dorms, Cafeteria, Library or other faculty or any administration...no overhead.

Quite a trick and they have succeeded.

We have once again been duped by the LIU board.

We need now, more then ever to "Save Southampton College" from the clutches of the omnivorous jaws of LIU. We need everyone to fill the seats at the November 23, town meeting to restrict the zoning. We need to keep a Liberal Arts College in Southampton.

We need to keep Southampton College alive and well in Southampton, not in Greenvale. We do not want Southampton College to quietly disappear into the dust bin of educational history along with all the records of how badly managed the college has been for the last forty years while it was paying two million dollars a year to LIU in "management and consulting" fees.

Thanks.

PLANE COMPLAINT

Dear Dan,

In reflecting on the summer season just past, my wife and I greatly enjoyed our house in Sagaponack - North. Our one concern, and the reason for this letter is the increase in air traffic at the East Hampton airport at all hours and by planes of greater size and noise.

A complaint log maintained at the airport, and the manager's office says there are restrictions on airport use, but these restrictions are voluntary, and often disregarded. It seems to us that a very small percentage of the population uses the airport at a great annoyance to those of us who endure life in the flight path.

We would greatly appreciate your identifying the elected officials responsible for airport use and any individuals and organizations dedicated to mitigation of this nuisance we might support.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Ira Rosenberg

THOSE PESKY PLANTS

Dear Dan,

The immediate plan to get rid of the phragmites is not for all of Georgica Pond as you suggest but rather for Georgica Cove, a narrow strip of water at the southeast edge of the pond, where, yes, Steven Spielberg, Arthur Ross, Courtney Ross, Cathy Raynor, and even I have property. The Georgica Association is making its own arrangements to take the voracious reeds on the Wainscott side. The whole pond at once as you suggest? I wish it were that easy!

As for the sailboats you mention they are 12' 1/2" catboats, which, by definition mean mainsail only, no jib, and most of them are fiberglass copies of the wooden originals.

Marjorie Chester

SAY WHAT?

Dear Dan,

I read your article today and was astounded by the sheer arrogance and condescension that only a truly insecure Yankee fan can exhibit.

To quote you:

"So the prediction is that it is going to be one of the best dramas in our baseball history, once again, but the Red Sox are going to lose in an amazing, Hollywood, dramatic ending and we are going to love every single second of it."

The Red Sox just came back from a 0-3 game deficit to beat your Grim Yankees at Yankee Stadium, 10-3. So I feel compelled to write and congratulate you on your sterling prediction — except that you got a little confused about which team would come out on top in that lovely Hollywood ending. Though I must say I, for one, thoroughly enjoyed every second of the ending.

So, my heartiest congratulations. The funny thing is that I've come to know one or two Yankee fans and actually have enjoyed our conversations, as they are able to be both proud of their team and respectful of mine. I can safely say you're not in that class.

The Yankees are a great team, with a great organization. I'm just sorry they have fans like you.

Try to have a happy October.

OOPS, I DIDN'T MEAN IT

Dear Dan,

My apologies for the previous posting/submission. I was commenting on an article that you have up on your web site entitled "Deja Vu," by David Rattiner. My comments were meant to be directed to Mr. Rattiner and not to you. I hope you will forgive my oversight and, if possible, relay the comments to Mr. Rattiner himself.

Many thanks.

Dear Ms. Smith and Leslie Ernst,

Just a note of gratitude. In the October 8 edition in the Health, Beauty & Fitness section was an article on eating disorders.

Police Blotter

Why Bother Shopping When The Streets Are Filled With "O-P-P"? Other people's property (O-P-P), that is. It seems that if it isn't nailed down, it's up for grabs. For instance, at the Dock restaurant in Montauk, a guest reported to police that someone stole two rods and a reel worth about a grand from the roof of his car, parked out front, while he was inside the establishment.

* * *

Licentious Licensing. Or In This Case - Why Go To DMV? An East Hampton resident of Cedar Drive reported that while his car was parked on Jenny's Path someone stole both of his license plates.

* * *

Justice Served? According to police reports, the series of hard-to-miss, homemade billboards on Montauk Highway in Sagaponack were given a "rebuttal." Apparently, this is the third time in recent weeks someone has interjected an opposing viewpoint. As they stood (scary penmanship and all), the signs maligned Senator John Kerry. Some clever someone spray-painted her or his not-too-jolly thoughts on a near-by building about the current President not far from the irksome signs. Like they say, for every opinion there's bound to be someone who won't agree.

Sticky Fingered Doll Stuck With Felony... According to East Hampton Town Police reports, a car was pulled over at Montauk Highway and Abraham's Path in Amagansett. Inside, authorities found a crack pipe, a bag containing cocaine and a loaded automatic handgun. The story begins in Montauk on Navy Road where the driver and passenger were visiting a friend. At some point, the friend excused himself to take a shower. Now that he was otherwise occupied, one of the pair went into his bedroom and walked out two grand richer. Discovering his money missing, he called authorities within minutes after getting out of the shower. Police nabbed the daring duet and recovered $2,043 in cash. The woman was charged with three felonies - criminal possession of stolen property in the fourth degree, grand larceny in the fourth degree and criminal possession of a weapon in the third degree, and one misdemeanor - criminal possession of a controlled substance in the seventh degree. Her partner-in-crime was charged with third degree weapon possession and possession of a controlled substance in the seventh degree.

Wanted in East Hampton? It appears a penny-pinching, merchandise-milking Manhattanite blew into the Polo Country Store on Main Street in East Hampton and breezed out with over $2,200 worth of leather shirts. He was caught and charged with a felony, grand larceny in the third degree. A bench warrant was issued when he failed to show up in court to face the charge. Stopped for a traffic infraction in Nassau County, a computer check indicated that he was a "wanted" man in East Hampton.

However Hard They May Try, Oil and Water Just Don't Mix. A woman and a man, both with orders of protection issued against each other,

"somehow met" in the parking lot of the Apple Bank on Montauk Highway in East Hampton. As one can imagine, trouble erupted. The man, who lives on Sagg Road in Sagaponack, was charged with grand larceny in the fourth degree and criminal contempt in the first degree, both felonies, along with harassment in the second degree, a violation, and the misdemeanor charge of criminal mischief in the fourth degree. He is alleged to have snatched his ex-paramour's handbag, smashed her cell-phone, pushed, grabbed and then, with teeth bared, did his best impression of Dracula, biting her. The woman, who hails from East Hampton, was charged with a misdemeanor count of criminal contempt. East Hampton Village Police Chief Gerard Larsen told reporters that the pair had violated their orders of protection when they met.

Finders Keepers. Losers Weepers. It's a shame it has to be that way. An East Lake Drive resident left his duffle bag on the dock at Gone Fishing Marina, located on East Lake Drive in Montauk, while he went to the fillet station to clean a fish. He went home without his duffle which, it turns out, he forgot on the dock. The next morning he returned to claim it, but go figure, it was gone. Among other items, the bag contained a $1,000 global positioning device and a $300 depth finder.
